distance to be covered by the race was half a mile.

The news of the coming event spread rapidly through the Cherokee settlements, and when Saturday came there were several hundred sport loving people, including a few pale faces, to witness the novel match.

Not until the very minute appointed for the start did Fairburn set eyes upon his antagonist. Then she emerged from the cabin suitably dressed for the occasion, with many a little suggestion of feminine weakness in her attire; coy, tawny, slight and beautiful, the very sight of her gave Fairburn's susceptible heart a flutter that did not augur well for his coming effort. The girl wore a rich scarlet cloak, which she deftly threw aside when the signal for starting was given, and away went the contestants.

The onlookers were as tense with excitement as were the champions of favorites at horse race or regatta, but there were no noisy demonstrations.

The start was made from the end of the course farthest from the cabin. The goal was only four feet from the pole fence, five feet in height, which enclosed the cabin and the little patch of maize which grew around it.

It was at first no very uneven match, and from the start each racer knew that the other was a master of the art as well as the possessor of the natural advantages which make winners in all of the contests of life.

Fairburn ran as if all that he had or hoped for was at stake. Five hundred dollars was not so much to him, but he had somehow conceived the fancy he was running for a better stake than money; that the girl herself, her heart, her future, his future—were side stakes.

But he soon discovered that the training of an athlete just out of college was no safe reliance in a contest with this wood spirit of motion—this tawny Camilla of the forest.

After the first fifty yards the girl gained steadily, steadily drew farther away from him, speedily, as light, as true, as direct, toward the goal as the arrows of her fathers had for centuries sped to their mark, and when she reached the end of the course she was nearly sixty yards ahead of him. Feeling no exhaustion, but with increased buoyancy of spirits she bounded over the fence, touching it with neither hand nor foot, and then, turning, she gracefully waved her hand at her competitor, saluted the onlookers, and coyly vanished into the cabin.

Fairburn paid his bet, and it was not difficult for him to persuade Miceo that he was entitled to visit the cabin that night to smoke a pipe with him and present his felicitations to the fair winner of the race.

That this visit was not disagreeable to either of the late rivals was evident by the small hour at which it terminated. That Fairburn was not displeased with the Cherokees was proved by the long stay which he made in the neighborhood, with no other excuse than the fine hunting and fishing, occasional races and frequent dances in the great conical tower which this sport loving people had dedicated to the uses of Terpsichore.

Here they were wont to assemble, form in line and move around to the weird music of their own voices until the leader took his place in the centre with a gourd partly filled with gravel, and assumed control of the festivities. They followed his every movement of limb and body, kept time to the crude music of his rattle, until the whole company was a swaying unit of humanity, apparently under the control absolutely of the gourd rattle. Then there would be wilder music and quicker movement, until the scene became intoxicating even to an onlooker, the participation was sure to overcome the participant with a curious [illegible], a kind of hypnotism; a wild, [illegible]less but not vengeful spirit of the environments; for the Cherokees had long given over vengeance and were more worshippers now than warriors; more fun-loving children than worshippers.

It was an innovation upon Indian customs, but quite often, through the mediation of Miceo, Fairburn was permitted to accompany Cynthiana in the dance.

When the time came that he felt constrained to depart from the settlement he visited the girl, and told her he must return to his Virginia home.

"But before I go," said he, "I claim another race as a right, in order that I may have a mere chance to repair my injured reputation as a runner and partly redeem my lost fortunes."

"What is the stake to be?" asked Cynthiana.

"Oh, well, say a hundred dollars," he replied. "Women do not bet high, I suppose."

"I do not believe in racing for money," she replied.

"Then I will bet my gun against your pony," he said.

"I suppose there must be a stake, or you would not be content, and so let it be as you suggest. My pretty Cutewah and I would not like to part, but I will bet her against your gun."

This race was to be witnessed only by the Morgans and a few of their nearest friends. A little before the time fixed Philip visited the cabin again and jocularly said:—

"Let's stake ourselves upon the race. If you win—I am to be your slave. If I win, you are to be my wife."

"Let it be so, then," gravely replied the girl, "for I have long felt the need of a slave."

If Philip Fairburn was anxious in the first race he was desperate now. If life merely had been the stake he would not have strained every nerve to win as he did, while the two ran for some distance side by side. But the girl had lost no part of her skill; her strength had not diminished a jot, and her nerves were as steady, her breathing as calm, as if she had been merely taking her morning exercise upon the banks of that beauteous river.

At two hundred yards from the end of the course she was fifty yards ahead. At one hundred she had lost no ground. At seventy-five she suddenly stooped and grasped her foot as if it had suffered a sprain. She seemed to be tugging at her dainty moccasin. Fairburn thought not of her being in danger, or her being in pain; he thought only of the priceless prize that the moment's delay might win for him. He clenched his teeth, bent his head further forward, threw his weight more upon his toes, made longer strides, strained every muscle until the Indians said his veins and cords looked big and strong enough for arrow shafts. No athlete in arena or race course, no athlete of the Greek penthathlon ever struggled for success as he struggled to win the prize of this contest. He shot forward like an arrow hurled from the ballista, and by the time the girl had resumed the race he was fifty feet ahead of her, and within twenty-five feet of the goal. That odds could not be overcome He was more exhausted than he knew, but in the delirium of his success he placed his hands upon the fence and vaulted over it.

Then he bethought him of her peril, and turning said:—

"I have won the race and you are mine; but what has happened to you dear? Are you hurt?"

"Not at all," she said quietly. "But an Indian maiden must not run in the race with her moccasin half off."

When he tried to take her in his arms she eluded him, and with a roguish smile glided into the cabin and to her apartment.

Whatever happened to that moccasin escaped the notice of all save the girl, and she gave no further explanation than the one hinted.

She was true to her promise. The young people were married in a week and lived together in almost ideal happiness until the white man's war came, and Philip fell, fighting, beside his brother-in-law, Miceo, under the leadership of their uncle, the Confederate raider, General John Morgan.

It seems something like a coincidence that the little place where he fell was called Cynthiana.

OCTOBER.

No clouds are in the morning sky,
The vapors hug the stream—
Who says that life and love can die
In all this northern gleam?
At every turn the maples burn,
The quail is whistling free,
The partridge whirs, and the frosted burrs
Are dropping for you and me,
Ho, hilly ho! heigh O!
Hilly ho!
In the clear October morning.

Along our path the woods are bold,
And glow with ripe desire;
The yellow chestnut showers its gold,
The sumachs spread their fire;
The breezes feel as crisp as steel,
The buckwheat tops are red,
Then down the lane, love, scurry again,
And over the stubble tread,
Ho, hilly ho! heigh O!
Hilly ho!
In the clear October morning.

Power From the Sun.

For Continuous Use of Power the System Gives But Little Promise.

The uncertainty which the engineer feels regarding the solar motor is due largely to the difficulties arising from the fact that the sun is not always available, even by day, and that it is entirely out of reach for power purposes, for one-half of the 24 hours, and he has as yet no idea of practical methods of storage, either of the heat or the power, for use during cloudy periods, hours, days and weeks even, when the engine cannot be kept in steady operation. It is, writes Dr. Robert H. Thurston, in Cassier's Magazine for August, of course, possible that much improvement may be effected in the electric storage battery, and it is even true that great improvements in that precious device are apparently already in sight; but even the ideal and perfect battery, could it be realized, would probably prove so costly and so enormous as a part of this system of sun power utilization as to make its use practically out of the question in temperate regions, where the sky is overcast so often that not over one-half the direct heat of the sun is each day, on the average, available, or in the tropics, where the rainy season makes it unavailable for months together. Where, as may occasionally be practicable, storage may be effected by raising water into extensive and elevated reservoirs provided by nature, this difficulty may prove less serious; but such exceptional advantages of location cannot be relied upon for any important aid in securing general utilization of the solar motor.

For necessarily continuous use of power it is thus evident this system gives little promise, and a cotton mill, for example, that must go into operation only when the sun comes out from behind a cloud and go out of action the instant it appears again, can hardly be expected to pay dividends. Water-power must be its reliance when coal cannot be employed, rather than either sun power or wind power, and its work must be done where a sufficient amount of fall and flow can be had to meet its maximum requirements, even at the period of minimum flow.

The avalibility of sunlight and heat for the purposes of the engineer differs greatly in different places, and with every change of latitude, as well as from season to season. This variability is an enormous handicap where it is sought to employ this energy. The remark is attributed to Professor Langley that all the coal deposits of Pennsylvania, if burned a single second, would not liberate a thousandth part as much heat as does the surface of the sun in that unit of time. Yet it is evident that our coal deposits, so long as they last, are worth more to us than all the available heat of the sun.

Population Statistics.

The Males Number 39,059,242, or 51.2 Per Cent. of the Total Population.

Washington, October 11.—The final census report on the population of the United States by sex, nativity and color, was issued today. It shows that the males number 39,059,242, or 51.2 per cent. of the total population in 1900. The increase of 13,233,631 in total population since 1890 is made up of 6,744,179 males and 6,489,452 females, an increase of 20.9 of males and 21.1 of females. The foreign-born element has increased only 12.4 per cent., and the native-born population 22.5 per cent. since 1890. As to color and race, the population in 1900 comprises 66,990,802 white persons and 9,312,585 colored persons, the latter comprising 8,840,785 persons of negro descent. The colored element as a whole, shows an increase of 17.8 per cent. since 1890.

It certainly is far from wise to buy Jewelry wherever you see Jewelry for sale.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER
