THE BEST AUTHORITY.

They say that worldly goods and gauds
Are all that's "worth the while";
They say romance is out of date,
And love is out of style;
They say a bright tiara's gems
Will solace any three;
But Philip, blue-eyed Philip,
He does not tell me so.

They say that lovers' strongest vows
Have proved but brittle things,
That Love must fly, since Art portrays
The little god with wings;
That youth's fond fancies quickly fade,
That men inconstant grow;
But Philip, faithful Philip,
He does not tell me so.

They say that one should only think
Of lofty birth and place;
They say it makes one thrill with pride
To set the social pace;
They say a cottage on the green
Must be forlorn and slow;
But Philip, ardent Philip,
He does not tell me so.

I let them prate of pride and peif,
I care not what they say,
O heart of mine! to-morrow's sun
Shall light our wedding-day,
Within our cottage, Love, content,
Shall ever bide, I know;
For Philip, dearest Philip,
He says it shall be so.

—Beatrice Hanscom in December Century.

A MODERN MAUD MULLER.

From American Women.

Rachel had been preserving strawberries. She pasted the last little slip of white on the last small jar with a vigorous pat, dropped her hands in her lap and let her gaze wander for a moment out through the wide kitchen window to the wheatfield that stretched beyond the orchard. There was a pensive look in her gray eyes, and when a gentle voice called her by name the girl started.

"What is it, mother?" she answered as the delicate little lady who paused in the doorway leading from the dining room repeated her name a second time.

"Aren't you almost through fixing up your preserves? Your father said that he would like you to bring out a pitcher of lemonade to the stile. Judge Welldon has just driven over to talk a little business, and there is a lady in the carriage with him."

A crimson wave swept over Rachel's face. Hastily she stood up, pulled down her sleeves and buttoned them about her wrists. "Yes, mother, I will, right away," she said as she untied her gingham apron and hung it on a peg behind the door. Very quickly a clear glass pitcher was filled with an icy drink and ready to serve.

What Judge Welldon saw as he sat in his carriage on the highway that ran by the farm was a slim, sweet girl in a light cotton frock, with a fair oval face lighted by a pair of expressive eyes and a small head crowned with soft brown hair coming down the rose bordered walk holding in one strong young hand a pitcher and in the other a small tray with glasses. He leaned back in his seat and watched the girl as she approached. The woman beside him leaned forward. She had heard of Rachael Sheldon a good deal of late and so studied carefully the little figure as it came nearer and nearer. Rachel paid no heed to either the judge or his companion until she directed one swift glance at her father, which showed that his face was troubled. Then Rachel bowed to the judge.

"Here father," she said as she handed him the pitcher and put the little silver waiter with its burden down on the stile and was about to turn away.

"Wait a moment, Miss Rachel," called Judge Welldon; "I want to introduce you to Miss Seaton."

Rachel bowed in her queenly little way in acknowledgment of the introduction, and a scornful smile played around the corners of the older woman's mouth, which Rachel would easily have detected had she been looking up. As her father stood quietly by and did not fill the glasses as Rachel expected him to do, she promptly became the hospitable hostess and took his place.

She handed a brimming glass to the judge who leaned forward and took it, passing it in to Miss Seaton. That lady held it aloft in her small and shapely hand and waited until the judge was supplied and then said in a voice that was more tinged with sarcasm than pleasantry, although the quotation was accompanied with a ripple of laughter:

"Thanks," said the judge, "a sweeter draft
From fairer hand was never quaffed."

Rachel smiled a forced little smile and fancied she saw a shadow of a frown on the judge's face.

"What a beautiful place you have here," said Miss Seaton—"an ideal farmhouse and such lovely roses! I suppose it has taken a great many years to improve a country place so much as this is."

"Yes," Rachel said: "We have lived here always—longer than I can remember. It was my grandmother's place."

"Indeed?" And Miss Seaton raised her brows questioningly.

Oh, how Rachael hated the woman. She knew that she hated her wickedly and wondered how Miss Seaton dared to assume that she was ignorant of the particulars of the place when it was all due to her persistent efforts to secure the old farm that she and her father were so deeply troubled. The delicate little mother as yet knew nothing of the possibility of their losing all they had because of a flaw in the title and a claim that the land belonged to the heirs of a wealthy, old, miserly bachelor who had died many years before her grandfather bought the place. Rachel was her father's standby and confidant. It would be time enough to tell the little mother all about it when worse came to the worst.

Judge Welldon represented Miss Seaton in the matter, though he was a fair and generous man and had assured Rachel's father that he would not push the claim of his client unduly.

As the judge drove down the road toward his beautiful country place a mile or two to the west, Rachel slipped
