Bay."

The captain liked the topic, evidently. He drew up a stool and sat down to pursue it further, growing from the jocose to the serious.

He could recommend Matcho Merida. He wasn't like the rest of these Black and Tans.

"He's made this trip with me six times now, and I've watched him close. He don't go in for the things that most of his breed do—cards and women and wine." (Miss Strathmore thought of her quotation.) "We get the chance to see things on these ships, you bet, but I've never seen Merida do a fool thing yet. It may because he's been to school in England, and runs the New-York end of affairs for their fincas, but why ever it is, it's so.

And edicated!" he added, awe inspiredly, "why, that fellow speaks four languages as well as he does his own—and got something to say in all of them. You mind what I say, Miss Elizabeth. I knew your father when I was a boy, and the best I could wish for his daughter would be to marry young Merida." He stood up and started off. "Here he comes now. Get him to tell you how he and the other young bloods held the Governor's palacio against a revolutionist mob for a day and a night. Make up to him."

Which—the advice and the strategy—had the natural effect of rendering Miss Strathmore more barely civil to Merida when he stopped to speak to her. He had changed the suit in which he had come on board, and was in white flannels now.

"He's not handsome," she decided, remembering the regular features of other Spanish blooded males she had known, "but he's quite the most swagger individual I ever saw."

He pulled a wicker chair beside her, and they began to talk. It was 10 o'clock then. They were still talking when the luncheon gong sounded at 1. They went down together and talked through the meal.

If Miss Strathmore had been stupid she would have stayed on deck the rest of the afternoon. As it was she went to the cabin for a nap, and then devoted herself—the least in the world, obviously—to her mother, until dinner time. But there was the evening after that. They spent it together in the bow and talked—of the phosphorus and things.

It was not until after a good many nights that they got to anything much more personal. Then it came all at once. Merida stood wedged into the extreme point of the bow and Miss Strathmore sat half overhanging the black ocean when the prow cut into gold light. She was holding fast to a stay. She could just see Merida's face in the starlight, and his eyes were on her steadily. There had been a stop in speech.

"Was I uncivil when you finished my line for me, that night?" he asked.

"Rather," Miss Strathmore answered him.

"And you didn't know why, I suppose?"

She admitted that she did not.

"Well," he explained, "it's just this. I get so sick of having people go on the basis that all men down here are—devils of fellows—Don Juans and all that. We get so deucedly much of it."

She reminded him that he had laid himself open to it.

"I know I did. But one does'nt expect an American or an Englishman to know his poets—if you don't mind my saying so. I never thought about your going on." There was a pause. "And I don't go in for woman and flirtations," Merida said. "I have never cared for any girl except you."

It was sudden, certainly—so sudden that she let go her hold on the stay. His hand went out to steady her instantly. Then he took it away.

"I suppose you are surprised," he said. "I am myself. But it's true."

Miss Strathmore's self-possession had weathered many experiences, but foundered at this. She did not think of anything to say.

"I don't want to bother," he told, her, "and I don't expect you to like me yet—but I hope you will—before long." Then he went off to other things, but conversation was not a success.

They were at anchor off Mazatlan the next day, some two miles out beyond the bar. Merida put in his appearance at breakfast in shore clothes.

"I'm going to land," he told Miss Strathmore, "if the captain will have a boat whistled for me."

"It's rough," she tried to suggest.

"I know it is," he answered, leveling his eyes straight on her for the benefit of all who might choose to see, so that she flushed very pink. If it were not I should ask you and your mother to go too." They had done it at Acapulco and Manzanillo before.

"I will not go," observed the Chilian; "it is too much danger to."

Merida caught Miss Strathmore's glance of contempt and nearly smiled.

Toward the middle of the morning a rowboat, whose owners were courageous, responded to the signals and ventured out to the ship. Merida went down the Jacob's ladder. The captain watched him.

"You'll come to grief, Matcho, if you don't watch out. See that your men aren't tequila drunk when you start back. It's pretty bad now, but it'll be rolling like fun then. We h'ist anchor at 3," he added, warningly.

Merida watched his chance to jump; he caught it expertly and the boat pulled away.

It was 2 o'clock when it reappeared, coming slowly, hidden in a hollow, climbing a crest, flung about through the frothing bar. Miss Strathmore and the captain and a good many others were watching it. Miss Strathmore had been shooting at driftwood and at a big turtle that was floating on its back in the sun. The captain had been watching her. The turtle was a shifting and difficult mark, but she had hit it three times, and then a boat had put out to bring it in.

"We'll have turtle steaks to-morrow," said the captain; "you're a pretty good shot."

But she had enough of the amusement, and they were leaning idly against the rail. The captain reverted to Merida.

"Matcho tell you about the palacio?" he asked.

"He won't," she answered; "he says he's forgotten it."

"He isn't much on talk," he said, approachingly. "Hasn't told you about the girl down below on the the spardeck, either, I suppose?"

She shook her head.

"Well," said the captain, she's a little Indian from one of his plantations down there—pretty little devil, too. Seems she's in love with him and he won't look at her. So what does she go and do but scrape the money together somehow and take steerage passage and follow him. She came on at San Jose, but he never knew she was abroad until after we got off the Guatemala coast. She's a shy one—and sharp. Then one day when he was down with the doctor looking at the hospital she showed herself, clasped his knees and wept, and all the rest of it—made the dickens' own row. He acted very well, but it put him in a ticklish kind of place. Of course we won't let her up here, and he's mighty careful to keep off the spardeck now. He's going to ship her back from 'Frisco, he says." He pointed to the back of a black-haired head that appeared over the side directly below them. "That's her." Evidently the eyes in the head were watching the boat, too.

She's seen you with him and she don't like you a little bit," the captain chuckled. "She calls you names."

Miss Strathmore did not think it amusing at all. The rowboat was near. Miss Strathmore met Merida's eye.

"He'll have a scramble of it getting up," the captain opined.

The ship was rolling heavily.

"And his Mexicans," said the captain, uneasily; "by heaven, they're half drunk, too. Look at their eyes."

Whether it was that or not, it was certain that they could not seem to manage to keep the boat alongside long enough for Merida to catch the platform, when the ship rolled down.

"Take your time, Merida," the chief engineer called to him—"take your time."

Apparently the word suggested something to Merida. He put his hand to his watch pocket—and then his face changed. There were three Mexicans in the boat, but only two of them had rowed; the other had been sitting near him in the stern, steering occasionly with an oar. Merida said something to this one. The fellow looked too innocent and shook his head. Things happened quickly after that. Merida caught the mozo by the arm, and that began the fight. The rowers shipped their oars, and, urged by the excitement and the tequila, joined in. The boat pitched and plunged.

"They'll kill him," the captain called out, "Lower away a boat."

"If they've no knives"—— began the purser. But as he said it a knife was thrown, and by the little Indian girl on the deck below.

"The captain swore one oath. "They'll do him now—sure," he said.

Merida had his man by the throat, but he was down, and all three were atop of him. One of them jumped up and caught the knife by the handle as it came, dextrously. He gave it to the man who had Merida under him, and the other two drew back. A spendid brown arm, with his hand grasping the knife, rose high and poised above Merida's breast. Then it fell—but uselessly, limp from the shoulder bone. There was smoke in the muzzle of the revolver in Miss Strathmore's hand.

Merida threw the wounded Mexican off, bent over him, felt in his sash, and drew out his own watch. The rowers had resumed their oars. "Now," said Merida, quietly, "you take me alongside."

The little Indian on the spardeck had watched it eagerly, hanging out far over the side. She turned now twisting around lithely upon her back, her face upturned. Her dark eyes glowed, her lips apart. Miss Strathmore, the revolver still in her hand, was straight above. The Indian threw back her head further still, and then laughed. Her right hand went to her forehead and came away again with a sweep, in mock salute—the salute of the matador who has missed his stroke and forsakes the ring.

How to Make Salad Dressing.

Half cupful of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of mustard, a pinch of cayenne pepper, one cupful of milk, half cupful of butter and three eggs. Put in the double boiler the milk and butter. Beat up the yolks of the eggs together with the mustard, salt and pepper and add to the melted butter and milk. Heat the vinegar separately and add little at a time to the mixture, adding whites of eggs last of all. When done, it will be thick, like custard.

How to Make Corn Bread.

One-half cupful of flour, one cupful of cornmeal (yellow), one rounded tablespoonful of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt and two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix thoroughly. Have ready one tablespoonful of melted butter and one egg, well beaten. Add to the dry mixture one cupful of milk, the egg and butter and beat all until well mixed. Turn into a well greased shallow pan and bake about 20 minutes. Cut into squares and serve hot.

Special Farmers' Institute.

The following letter from Mr. Wm. L. Amoss, director of farmers' institutes in this State, was received too late for publication in the SENTINEL last week, but it is in time to be of interest to many of its readers:

MY DEAR MR. EDITOR:

At the State fairs, Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations and on many farms in the North and North-west, including Canada, the Pan-American and its Live Stock Exposition, I have met many men and women who are recognized authorities and leaders in their lines as educators, importers, exhibitors, expert judges, breeders and feeders, whose acquaintance will be an enduring resource I shall always cherish. That my friends, the Institute patrons, may share the privilege with me, I have thought it possible, where the work of our Department is appreciated, and we are sufficiently encouraged and supported, to give a Special Institute, before the regular Institute season, where two or three of these well known men or women could be invited to meet our farmers. With this thought in mind, I have asked several of those I have met, if we arrange such a meeting as mentioned, where a visit can be made pleasant and profitable, in a better understanding of Maryland, would they accept an invitation to it? Without an exception we received favorable replies, with a complimentary expression showing an interest in our State and the hospitable habits of its people.

Though the thought came late to offer this treat at this time we now have the promise of four, (who, when our patrons meet them, they will long remember) to attend a Special Institute, one on the Eastern Shore, at Easton, Talbot county, Dec., 17th; one, accessible to all patrons, at Towson, Baltimore county, Dec., 19th; and one for Western Maryland, at Westminster, Dec., 20th. The first and last will have an evening session.

Our invited guests will be Col. Jos. H. Brigham, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, subject, "The United States Department of Agriculture and our Foreign Markets."

Mr. L. H. Kerrick, Bloomington, Ill., the Champion Baby Beef Feeder, who in 1899 and also in 1900 took the first prize on a carload of cattle at the Chicago International Live-Stock Expositions, selling the last for the highest price ever paid in any market for a carload of cattle. This year, Dec. 2nd, he will again show a load selected from 60 yearlings I saw in one of his feed-lots in October 1900. Cattle, I then thought more beautiful and picturesque in their pasture than any I had ever seen. His stbject will be "Why and How I Grow Baby Beef."

Hon. O. C. Gregg, Supt. Farmers' Institutes of Minnesota. I met Mr. Gregg first in 1896 in Chicago at a meeting of International Institute Workers. Speaking of his experience he said, "My father was an itinerant, I was ordained a minister, but not feeling called to the work, accompanied by my good wife, we moved far out, by wagon, into the open country, where we carved a good farm out the plains, fought Sioux Indians, taught school, helped my neighbors when I could, and have conducted Farmers' Institutes for 15 years." Mr. Gregg is every inch a man, one of those noble characters and frontiersmen to whom we Americans owe so much, for this our great and prosperous country. I have asked him to speak of "The Dairy Cow" and "The Farmer of the Past, Present and Future."

Miss Emma Suter Jacobs, Director of the Cooking Schools of Washington, a tireless worker and constant student, having begun her work under adverse conditions, understands the needs of housekeepers and how to make their work light and pleasant. Her subject will be "The Staff of Life"—Demonstrated.

If this first effort, to bring men and women whom we read of and have learned to admire, and whose writings and speeches we accept as a text on which to base our life-work, succeeds, it shall grow under our management into a prominent feature of Institute work; but we should have a large audience, of our representative people, to meet them, or it would injure rather than improve the work, as such visitors will exercise great influence over others we invite in the future. As an advertiseing feature for our state, we know of nothing better, as their impressions obtained when among us will be accepted as facts by thousands of hearers they annually meet or who read their writings from the press. We hope that everyone, men and women, will come to meet them. It is quite probable that another opportunity will not be offered in this State to hear them.

Though I shall send a private letter to every patron who has shown enough interest in our work, to give us his name and address, about five thousand, if you will make mention of the above facts through your press, I shall be very grateful and I have no doubt that patrons will be also, who have not accepted repeated warnings, that there is in Agriculture, as in all other callings, an everlasting need to hustle, and to keep informed what others are doing and how they do it, that they may continue to have a thanksgiving turkey every year, grown by themselves.

Our regular series of Institutes will begin in Garrett county, January 7th. We will then do continuous work to, and including, March 8th. The regular institute will be held in Talbot county, Easton, February 7th and 8th; Baltimore county, January 22nd and 23rd at Monkton; and Carroll county, Middleburg, January 20th and 21st, for which other Institute workers have been engaged.

Yours truly,

WM. L. AMOSS,
Director Department Farmers' Institutes, Md. Agricultural College.

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

(Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master.)

In the days of 'wild cat' money in the West, the Ames shovels were used as currency. They were as stable as gold; their price did not vary a cent in twenty years. The very name of Oliver Ames & Son, was a synonym for honesty. It was current all over the world.

On the same principle Benson's Porous Plaster is the universal standard external remedy. To say it is a "good" plaster does not describe it; it is the best possible plaster. For every disease in which an external remedy is available, Benson's Plaster is used almost as a matter of course.

Benson's Plaster quickly relieves and cures where other modes of treatment are either exasperatingly slow or have no good effect whatever. Coughs, colds, lumbago, kidney trouble, rheumatism, lame back, etc., are at once benefited and soon cured.

Capsicum, Strengthening and Belladonna plasters have none of the curative virtues of Benson's. More than 5,000 physicians and druggists have commended Benson's Plaster as a remedy in which the public may have implicit confidence; while, in a comparative test with other plasters, Benson's has received fifty-five highest awards. Beware of substitutes and cheap imitations.

For sale by all druggists or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

A Pumpkin Pie Vision.

BY JOSH WINK.

Old Doddridge ate his frugal lunch
Of milk and pumpkin pie,
And fell to musing, as he ate,
Of days that were gone by.
The pie a rich aroma sent
To his reflective brain,
And, oh, the pictures it called up—
An old time country lane.

An old time country lane, with grass
All straggling by the side;
A boy, who trudged along the path,
With basket at his side—
A jolly boy, whose eyes were keen,
Who felt inclined to sing,
And saw the glory of the fall,
And fun in everything.

And then he saw a comely girl,
With cheeks of honest red,
Who smiled at him with sunny glance,
And tossed her shapely head.
He saw the old schoolhouse again,
And heard the teacher speak;
And on the roads of frozen snow
He heard the wagons creak.

He saw the shellbark hickory tree;
He saw the kitchen door;
He saw the pantry shelves again—
With pumpkin pies galore;
He sniffed the tang of cider sweet—
The bloom of days gone by—
And then old Doddridge wakened up
And ate his pumpkin pie.

How to Jelly Chicken.

Boil until tender in enough water to cover one chicken. Remove when done and let the water boil down to one quart. Cut the meat into small pieces. To the water add three-quarters of a box of gelatin soaked, one tablespoon worcestershire sauce and salt and pepper to taste. Slice one hard boiled egg and add to the chicken. Pour over it the strained liquor; mix well and put in square mould and set in cool place to harden.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,

EDWARD LYNCH.
