THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

GETTING FRANK MARRIED.

"Why!" declared Miss Gale; "it is a splendid exercise."

"Of course," said old Colonel Daintree.

"It's recommended by all the doctors," insisted Miss Gale, pinching the tire of the back wheel.

"Naturally," said Colonel Daintree.

"It enables you to see the country," went on the young lady argumentatively. It makes you hungry, it is the best thing for the temper that was ever invented."

"I wonder how any young people have the impudence not to cycle," agreed the colonel.

"I'm glad you agree with me, Colonel Daintree."

"My dear young lady, you're so absolutely in the right. What do you say, Di?"

The two walked through the gates of the park, and Di, the terrier, barking agreement, followed. The indignant young woman wheeled her machine near to the pavement slowly so that the old gentleman could keep up with her without inconvenience. She was flushed—this partly because of a brisk spin in the park; mainly because she was reviewing a grievance of imperial gravity.

"Fact of the matter is," said the old gentleman as they went down the hill, "my nephew is a fool."

"In regard to this question of cycling," she agreed, cautiously.

"None of the other Daintrees were ever like him. In the years gone by no Daintree would ever have dreamt of becoming assistant professor at the College of Science."

"It requires brains."

"And brains," said the colonel proudly, "were never a strong point with the Daintrees."

"Before Frank."

"Exactly! They've been storing it up through generations apparently for his benefit."

"At the same time" urged, Miss Gale, fingering the buttons at the side of her skirt, "that gives him no right to dictate to me in regard to cycling."

"Exactly my opinion. Eh, Di?"

The terrier barked approval.

"And although, of course, I like him," said the young lady, glancing at the ground shyly, "and all that, I cannot permit him for a single moment to say that I shall not do this or that I shall do that."

"I should have felt very much inclined to tell him so."

"I did," said the young woman firmly.

The colonel bent to dust his shoes.

"These young professors," he remarked, "get a didactic manner that is at times highly ridiculous. I'm afraid I shall have to get Frank married in order to—"

"Married!" The bicycle was stopped suddenly. "To whom?"

"You won't speak of this," said the old gentleman, returning. "I don't want it to get about."

"You can rely on me."

"Don't happen by chance to know a Mme. Van Oppen?"

"I don't know her," said the girl quickly, "and I do not want to. She wrote a ridiculous article on 'Unwomanly Sports' that appeared in the—"

"Rather a pleasing sort of widow," said the colonel. "Fine figure of a woman, too; and I happen to know that she thinks very highly of my nephew."

"Nothing clever in that."

"And I rather think that with a little management, a word in season, if you understand me, my dear young lady—"

"I think, Colonel Daintree," said Miss Gale, almost tearfully, "that you ought not to interfere in matters that concern other people."

She laughed rather uneasily. "Good-by, Colonel Daintree. I must go home and work."

"You won't let this that I've told you go any further?"

"No," promised Miss Gale, decidedly, wheeling off; "I'll see that it doesn't go any further."

Colonel Daintree went carefully down the steps to the Terrace walk, chuckling so much that infants who were exercising their dolls stared at him amazedly, and in their astonishment allowed their tow-haired, staring-eyed charges to assume an upside down position that was almost undignified. The old gentleman talked to his dog, as, leaning on the parapet, he looked at the lily-shaped fountain, sparkling in the sunlight, and watched the folk coming up the pathway from the riverside. He lighted a cigar, but his thoughts were so absorbing that he allowed it to go out. Presently he saw among the people who were coming up the gardens a serious young man, wearing glasses. He waved his walking stick and the young man hastened his thoughtful pace.

"My boy," cried the colonel, cheerfully, "how are you? How are you? How are you?"

"Not very well, uncle."

"That confounded business—"

"It's not that, sir," said Mr. Frank Daintree. "I—I have had some little dispute with Miss Gale." The colonel was much astonished. "Rather worried over it."

"Tell me," said the colonel. And he listened to an account of the dispute with all the attention of one receiving news of perfect freshness.

"And I must say," concluded the young man, "that I consider there is no necessity for a girl to cycle, and that there are many other exercises open to her of a gentler and—er—more womanly character."

"I quite agree with you," said the old gentleman emphatically.

"I may be wrong"—the colonel would not hear of it—"but it seems to me that collecting autographs, for instance—"

"You have taken the words from my mouth," said the colonel.

"Or croquet—

"I was going to suggest croquet."

"Or—" Mr. Frank Daintree seemed, after a moment's thought, to be unable to expand the list. "Well, there are plenty of things besides this craze for cycling."

"I call it unwomanly," said the colonel. "Worst of it is, they do not seem to know where to stop."

"And if they don't know, sir, we must tell them," urged the younger man hotly.

"It's a duty that we owe to society at large."

"And yet, when I ventured to hint to Miss Gale that I looked upon cycling with disfavor, my remarks were received with—well, almost contempt."

"I don't know what girls are thinking of," said the colonel, despairingly. "Fact of the matter is, I expect, you don't go quite the right way to work, Frank. You are too deferential, too courteous, too submissive. Now a girl like Miss Gale requires the hand of steel more than the glove of velvet."

"Not sure that I quite follow you, sir," said the other, doubtfully.

"Fact of the matter is, strictly between ourselves, Miss Gale wants a lord and master; some one who will simply make her obey his commands."

"That was not the impression that I gained from her."

"What I mean to say is that's the kind of man she ought to marry."

"Marry," stammered Mr. Frank Daintree.

"I know just the very man," declared the colonel, jubilantly. "As it happens, I've got him in my mind's eye at the present moment."

"I think you'd better keep him there sir," said Mr. Daintree, warmly. "This is not a matter that calls for the interference of any third person."

"You leave it to me, my boy," said the old gentlemn, cheerily; "I will see what I can do."

"I should be sorry to show any want of respect for you, sir, but I must say—"

"He won't allow her to rove all over the place, cycling," said the old gentleman, confidently. "He'll soon let her know that the proper place for a woman is the fireside."

"Not on a summer's day like this."

"All the year 'round," snapped the colonel, "all the year 'round. That's my dog barking. I must be going."

"Before you go, sir—"

"Good-by," said the colonel.

Colonel Daintree was a man who read his newspaper carefully and completely, and he flattered himself that he missed little or nothing. In reading his local journal at the bow window of his rooms at the end of that week he came across two advertisements which gave him great conetent. The terrier on the colonel's knew was also scanning the journal closely, with a view apparently of ascertaining the latest knews in regard to the muzzling order.

"For Sale—Lady's bicycle. Cost $100. A bargain. Address Miss E. G., 900 Fifth St., New York."

Further down was the second advertisement:

Wanted to Purchase at Once—Safety bicycle, with latest improvements, for learner. Address Professor Daintree, The Grove, 4 Madison Ave., New York."

The old gentleman slapped his knee with satisfaction, making the terrier jump, and the dog, a little annoyed, went to the window, and presently commenced to show signs of recognition. The colonel put down the newspaper to ascertain the cause of Di's excitement, and saw Miss Ella Gale walking toward the Park in company with his nephew, the two being quite obviously on the best of terms with each other.

"Now that, Di," explained Colonel Daintree, rubbing the interested terrier behind the ear, "that is the result of what we call strategy."

IN THE WINTER.

(Benson's Plaster Is Pain's Master.)

For coughs and colds Benson's Porous Plasters are an incomparably better remedy than any other—external or internal. Their medicinal properties enter the skin and go straight to the seat of the disease.

They relieve and cure a "seated" cold without disturbing the system or upsetting the stomach. Cough mixtures often nauseate. Benson's Plasters are medicinal in the highest degree, and quickest to act.

Placed on the chest or back or on both at once in serious cases, the good effect is felt immediately. The congestion yields, the cough abates and the breathing improves.

Lung or bronchial affections or kidney disease, are cured with the least possible suffering and loss of time.

Benson's Plasters are immeasurably superior to Belladonna, Strengthening, Capsicum or any other combination in plaster form. They are also preferable to ointments, liniments and salves.

Benson's Plasters have received fifty-five highest awards over all competitors; and more than 5,000 physicians and druggists have declared them to be one of the few trustworthy household remedies. For sale by all druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

Be sure you get the genuine. Accept no imitation or substitute.

The Partial Corn Failure.

The past season goes into history as recording the nearst approach to corn failure the country has ever known, according to "The American Agriculturist" of November 16, in its final crop summary. Enough husking has now been done to justify an estimate of the rate of yield, and the general average is placed at 17.4 bushels an acre. Of the area planted, a considerable acreage was eventually abandoned, leaving the corn acreage finally harvested this year 81,515,000 acres. Applying the estimated rate of yield, this gives a total crop of 1,418,949,000 bushels, the smallest since 1894. This authority has further tabulated the crop in seven surplus States, showing these 796,642,000 bushels, against 1,475,000,000 bushels in the same States in 1900 and 1,469,000,000 bushels in 1899.

Holding Up the Milk.

This is a peculiar vice and one affected by many cows. Indeed, there is scarcely a herd in the country that does not contain one or more cows that are given to the habit of holding up their milk. Such cows, as a rule, are possessed of highly nervous organizations. They are quite apt to take a prejudice to certain persons as milkers, or if spoken to harshly they can be easily thrown into this unfortunate state of mind and body. The easiest and surest remedy for such a habit that we have ever tried is to set a palatable mess of food before the cow when we sit down to milk her. Her mind is at once diverted from the act of milking, and she lets down the milk naturally and freely.

How to Make Nut Loaf.

Two cupfuls of stale bread crumbs, one cupful chopped hickory nut meats, one-half cupful of seeded raisins, one-half saltspoonful salt. Moisten with hot water, cover and let it stand ten minutes, then form into a loaf in a buttered bread pan and bake an hour in a moderate oven. Slice and eat cold with butter.

How to Sweeten Butter.

If one has butter that is not entirely sweet, add to it a little more salt and a pinch of soda and bring to a boil on the stove. When cold, remove the cake of fat, wipe dry, and it will be found perfectly sweet for cooking.

The man who gathers the collection in church may be said to have a passing interest in religious matters.

ST. NICHOLAS FOR YOUNG FOLKS.

Are there any boys or girls in your home? If so do you want them to grow up familiar with the best literature and art, and with all their best impulses quickened? There is a way to do it, at an expense of less than one cent a day, —a way to have in your home the greatest educational influence of our time.

"St. Nicholas for Young Folks" is the medium—a magazine absolutely unequalled in the literature of the world. It is recommended by educators everywhere,—it contains only the very best and most helpful and entertaining literature, and it is illustrated by the greatest of American illustrators.

some new features are to be introduced into this famous periodical—one is the printing of long stories complete in a single number,—no serials. A splendid group of stories by the best living writers for young folks has been gathered for this purpose.

"NATURE STUDY"

is now a great feature of St. Nicholas. The young readers ask questions and they are answered in a department called "Nature and Science." Private schools take the magazine for this alone. The "St. Nicholas League" is an organization of St. Nicholas readers wherein prizes are offered for the best pictures, stories, poems, etc.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

Westminster, April 10th, 1890.

Mr. Jos. B. Boyle:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,

EDWARD LYNCH.
