NOTICE OF CO-PARTNERSHIP.

Beginning January 1st, 1902, and from and after that date, until further notice, I have associated my son, A. T. Hunt, with me in the General Merchandise Business, in Hampstead, Carroll county, Md. T. J. HUNT.

EXILED.

—oo—

It comes to me often in silence,
When the firelight splutters low—
When the black, uncertain shadows
Seem wraiths of long ago;
Always with a throb of heartache,
That fills each pulsive vein,
Comes the old, unquiet longing
For the peace of home again.

I'm sick of the roar of the cities,
And of faces cold and strange;
I know where there's warmth of welcome,
And my yearning fancies range
Back to the dear old homestead,
With an aching sense of pain,
But there'll be joy in the coming
When I go home again.

When I go home again! There's music
That never may die away,
And it seems the hands of angels,
On a mystic harp at play,
Have touched with a yearning sadness
On a beautiful, broken strain,
To which is my fond heart wording—
When I go home again.

Outside of my darkening window
Are the great world's clash and din,
And slowly the autumn shadows
Come drifting, drifting in,
Sobbing, the night wind murmurs
To the splash of the autumn rain;
But I dream of the glorious greeting
When I go home again.

—Eugene Field.

For the Sentinel.

Southern California.

Southern California, regarded by many as the choicest section of this country, is a little world of itself. This large tract comprises about one-fourth of the State. It was formerly regarded as a desert. Here, within an area of 45,000 square miles, may be found a great variety of scenery and climate. Along the coast it is cool in summer, with a constant breeze from the Pacific. At a distance of from 20 to 30 miles from the ocean the breeze loses some of its power, but it is still sufficient to temper the summer heat. Decidedly the chief attraction of Southern California is its climate, and the practical fact remains that this part of California has not its climate parallel, or anything resembling it, in the world. This is the feature that brings three-fourths of the Eastern visitors to Southern California.

This region alone, of all the territory of the United States except Southern Florida, is described by the much used term "sub-tropical." Lacking much of being a hot country, and with a summer the days of which are nearly all warm in the sunshine and cool in the shade, there is yet never any actual cold in winter nor oppressive sultriness in summer. The nights are always pleasant and cool.

The scenery is also varied. There are long stretches of valleys and rolling foothills, and higher up in the mountains deep canons and pine-clad summits, and on the Northern slopes snow lies late in the spring.

The section usually referred to as Southern California includes the seven counties in the southern part of the State, namely, Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside, Santa Barbara, San Bernadino, Ventura and San Diego. The area of this section is nearly as large as England, and its development in the past 20 years has, indeed, been remarkable.

One of the most important features of this development during the past few years has been the utilization of an abundant subterranean water supply, which was not previously known to exist. On this account this part of the country can no longer, with justice, be called a semi-arid section. It is estimated that over 75,000 inches of water have been developed from underground sources during the past three years.

Nearly all the products of the tropics grow here in astonishing vigor. Most of the beautiful plants and trees of foreign lands have been imported and flourish. Flowers, delicate, rare and costly everywhere else, here thrive and grow large. The fig and the olive, which have always presented to us the idea of something foreign, are common and hardy trees here.

The advantages of Southern California are peculiar, and have often been described. It is a renowned resort for invalids and tired people and all health seekers. The orange, the lemon, the fig, the olive, the raisin and the grape are among the common staples. Millions of gallons of wine are produced every year.

Southern California, when it became understood, offered inducements hitherto unknown. It is to the United States now, what the south of France and Italy are to the dwellers in England and Northern Europe.

They speak of summer and winter in California, but the two terms mean, as stated, not hot and cold, but wet and dry. Yet there is no rainy season as that term would be understood in the East. In the wet season, from November to May, it may rain every day, but for the last few years it has rained only a few times each year and then for a short time only. And then in the summer, the dry season, it may be said to be always dry. The long days are cloudless. The umbrella is lost, and the overcoat, if there was one, is forgotten. Yet strange, to the feeling, it is not hot; on the hottest day in summer there is a breeze.

Now, long as the journey is, this region is the yearly Mecca of thousands of the climate tired of every State. It is a woman's country. It is where half clad childhood romps in freedom and it is where the invalids live out of doors.

This short description of Southern California is from things I have learned by experience, by careful study and by inquiries during the short space of time I have been here.

Very respectfully,

CHARLES N. MYERS.

Don't trust a feller that looks somewhere else when ye try to look in his eyes.

Borrowing is sorrowing, and so is lending half the time.
