ROSE AYLESWORTH'S LOVER.

From Woman's Life.

It was a blustering winter's night. The rain beat furiously upon the windows of a house situated in the very heart of Dartmoor, the residence of George Chapman, bachelor and magistrate.

At the present moment he was seated in a comfortable easy chair before a blazing fire and was apparently quite indifferent to the stormy elements without. He was a handsome man, seemingly about forty years of age, but there was something cruel in the expression of his thinly compressed lips, and from time to time his cold gray eyes would glitter like those of a snake; yet, withal, George Chapman was a highly respectable and respected individual.

Presently he took up a daily paper, and his eye fell upon a column headed "Escaped From Dartmoor—A Criminal at Large."

Mr. Chapman appeared to be deeply interested in the following account:

"About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, when some batches of prisoners who had been working in the farm grounds were being taken back to the prison, a heavy mist suddenly enveloped the whole party. Three convicts in the front rank made a dash for liberty, overturning a civil guard in their mad rush.

"Matters became exciting and a chase ensued. Close to where the prisoners bolted there is a strip of copse, and it was thought that the men had made for it. The place was searched, and two men were discovered. One, on being sighted, turned and ran in the opposite direction. At this two officers fired simultaneously. One of the charges lodged in the prisoner's back. He threw up his arms and, with a groan, dropped dead. The second prisoner was captured after a desperate struggle.

"In the meantime the third had got clear away. As many officers as could be spared from the prison, both mounted and on foot, scoured the moors for miles, but night closed in without the fugitive being sighted. The escaped man is under sentence of penal servitude for life, having been convicted of murder. He is of splendid physique, tall and muscular and goes by the name of Joe Curtis."

Mr. Chapman laid down the paper with a sigh of relief, then leaned forward and rang the bell.

"See the house is well locked up tonight, Jenkins," he said to the servant who appeared in answer to his summons, "for I see by the paper that one of the convicts from the prison is still at large; so take extra precautions. I shall not want you again tonight," he concluded.

When the servant had gone, Mr. Chapman rose and crossed over to his writing table. Unlocking a drawer, he took from it an old copy of The Standard. It was worn and crumpled and dated ten years back. He turned to one of the leading paragraphs, headed "Mysterious Murder of Sir John Graham." He had read the account a hundred times, but each time it seemed to afford him fresh interest.

"Convicts always make one think of this," he muttered to himself. Then, replacing the paper in the drawer, he sat down once more before the fire.

Two hours later he was on the point of retiring for the night. He heard a peculiar scraping sound outside one of the windows. He listened attentively and distinctly heard a noise as of the falling away of some of the stone masonry. He went cautiously toward the window, but a loud bang, mingled with the noise of shattered glass, caused him to start back. The next moment the shutter fell into the room, and behind this appeared the figure of a man in convict's garb.

"Silence! Do not speak or give the alarm, or you are a dead man!" the newcomer said in a quick, low voice, for Chapman had made a hasty movement toward the bell. He recoiled, however, on seeing the barrel of a revolver in close proximity to his face.

"Lock the door," continued the unwelcome visitor in hard, metallic tones, "and if any one comes do not in any way reveal my presence—that is, if you value your life. I am a desperate man and mean every word I say."

Chapman had no choice but to obey, but he was closely followed by the convict, who still kept his revolver on a level with the other's head.

"Now, put the shutter up. It will hold together with the help of some pieces of furniture," continued the intruder, and again Chapman obeyed mechanically. He seemed under some sort of spell.

"I want a change of clothes—quick!" said the convict after his orders had been executed.

"But"—began Chapman, his courage gradually returning.

"No 'buts,' please," interrupted the other sharply. "I give you two minutes. If you are not back by then, I will"—

Chapman did not stay to hear more. He hurried off in obedience to his strange visitor's command. His first impulse was to arouse the household, but something held him back.

When he returned to the room he had recently quitted, he found the convict kneeling on the hearth rug. He was burning his clothes.

"I think this suit will fit you. It once belonged to some one about your own height and build," observed Mr. Chapman, handing the convict the suit of rough gray tweed he had brought.

With a sudden change of expression the convict started to his feet.

"By Jove," he exclaimed in astonishment, "these are my old tweeds. How well I remember them, and, see here, in the pocket is an old letter from Rose Ay— But, great heaven, what are these dark stains? Blood!" And he fixed a pair of piercing eyes upon Chapman, who started as if an electric shock had passed through him. Then the color of his face changed to a sickly green.

"Richard Graham!" he gasped, clutching the nearest chair for support.

"Yes, George Chapman, I am Richard Graham, alias Joe Curtis, the convict, the man who ten years ago was charged with the murder of his uncle, old Sir John Graham. Of course, I knew you would recognize me sooner or later, though doubtless I am changed a bit since the old days," and he gave a bitter laugh.

"I was found guilty, as you know," he went on, but owing to extenuating circumstances the judge kindly spared my neck and sent me to a life which to me was worse than any death."

"Your tone implies that the sentence was unjust," observed Chapman, now quite himself again.

"And so it was," was the fierce response. "God knows I was innocent of so foul a crime, and you know it, too, George Chapman!" he said, advancing a few steps nearer the latter, who recoiled under the convict's scrutinizing gaze. "I suspected you at the time, but sufficient proof was lacking, and I was condemned instead. This old suit of mine, which disappeared so mysteriously, tells its own tale. Ah, you tremble, lying fiend, coward, murderer! By heaven, I'll"—

"Mercy, mercy!" yelled Chapman, in an excess of fright, for Graham's finger had moved toward the trigger of his revolver.

"Bah! You are not worth the trouble," sneered the ex-convict, contempt visible in every feature, "and as for mercy—is that all you think of now? Get up you groveling coward, and go and sit at that table."

Chapman obeyed sullenly.

"Write a full confession of the crime. Begin 'I, George Chapman, do hereby confess that Richard Graham is wholly innocent of the murder of Sir John Graham, which took place on the evening of Dec. 8, 1882, and'— Now go on and finish. I give you two minutes to do it in." He then sat down in a chair opposite.

Presently Chapman looked up, and his face was ghastly to look upon. He handed the paper to Graham who read it carefully through.

"Good!" he said. "Now tell me what became of Rose Aylesworth. Did your treachery succeed as well in that quarter?"

"Yes."

"You lie! Take care, or, as there is a heaven above us, I will shoot you dead."

"You mistake my meaning," Chapman said hurriedly, alarmed at the tempest of passion in his enemy's eyes. "She believed in your innocence. I had no power over her."

"Thank God!" burst involuntarily from Graham' lips. "Is she still at the old house?" he asked presently, and in his excitement he half rose from his chair.

"Yes; but she shall never be yours." And quick as lightning Chapman leaned forward to seize the revolver which lay on the table. But Graham was still quicker and snatched it out of his grasp before he had time to pull the trigger.

"So you want to commit a second murder, my friend," he said coolly. "Come let us have a little confidential chat instead. I want to know what's been going on in the world during the last ten years. Why, man, you look about dead with fright. I assure you I have no intention of killing you; that is, if—but at present I am dying for a drink. Have you anything that—ah, yes, I see, whisky and soda; just the thing! By Jove, it's long since I had such a treat as this!" he said, raising the glass to his lips.

Suddenly he felt himself seized from behind. In a second he had turned like a wild animal upon his assailant, and a deadly struggle began. Chapman had managed to jerk the revolver out of his anniversary's hand, and it was Graham's object to keep himself between the weapon and his antagonist.

Both men were strongly built, but Chapman had some little advantage in height. Graham, however, was more agile, and the manual labor of ten years' prison life had added to his natural muscular strength. Chapman was getting the advantage when there was a sound of footstops in the passage outside, and a loud, peremptory knock sounded on the door.

"Open, in the queen's name!" said a sharp, gruff voice.

Chapman jumped to his feet with a smothered oath, then he fell back against the wall, terror depicted on every feature, for Graham had sprung to the door and unlocked it, and three of the prison officers entered the room. They closed quickly around their prisoner, but to their surprise no resistance was offered. With a quiet smile, Graham turned to them and said:

"I am sorry to have caused you so much trouble, gentlemen, but I had no choice. I was a desperate man and resorted to desperate means. But see here—this will explain matters," handing the paper containing George Chapman's confession to one of the officers.

At that moment a loud report rang through the room. In the confusion Chapman had picked up the revolver unperceived, and now he lay stretched on the floor with a bullet wound in his temple. He passed judgment upon himself.

"Oh, Dick, Dick!" And Rose Aylesworth, with a glad, low cry, took the convict's closely cropped head between her two hands and kissed his thin, sunken cheeks. As he looked up into her face, beautiful in its loving tenderness, all the horror of his convict life faded away into oblivion.

Gladys—"Were you alarmed when he kissed you?"

Ethel—"Dreadfully!"

Gladys—"And did you scream?"

Ethel—"Oh, no! It was a still alarm!"

It's the easiest thing in the world to offer assistance to people who don't need it.

ONCE IS ENOUGH TO SEE

Gustave Dore's portrait of Dante is worth seeing—once. But once is enough. Some such look you notice on the faces of those who have suffered, and still suffer, much physical pain; people subject to rheumatism, gout, neuralgia, periodic headache, lumbago, or pain from some old lesion. This pain-habit puts its marks on them, as the custom of handling ropes crooks a sailor's fingers; or as too much riding of a bicycle stamps a worried expression on certain faces. No wonder people said of the Italian poet as he passed along, "There goes

THE MAN WHO NEVER LAUGHS."

The complaints above named all yield to the action of Benson's Porous Plasters, and quickly too. Not only those, but colds and coughs, kidney and liver affections, all congestions and muscular strains, diseases of the chest, asthma and all ailments which are open to external treatment. It is frequently said that Benson's Plaster is Pain's Master. It cures when others are not even able to relieve. For thirty years the leading external remedy. The old-style plasters, as well as salves, liniments, oils, etc., have little or no efficacy as compared with it. Use it. Trust it. Keep it in the house. Ask for Benson's Plaster; take no other. All druggists, or we will prepay postage on any number ordered in the United States on receipt of 25c. each.

BOTH FOOD AND MEDICINE.

The curative value of fruit is becoming more and more insisted upon by those who make a study of dietetics. Grapes are recommended for the dyspeptic, the consumptive, the anaemic, and for those with a tendency to gout and liver troubles. Plums, also, are said to be a cure for gouty and rheumatic tendencies. The acid fruits, especially lemons and oranges, are particularly good for stomach troubles and rheumatism.

It is not sufficient, says the advocates of the fruit cure, to eat a small quantity at breakfast or dinner. One should eat from two to eight pounds of grapes a day, or, if oranges are the curative agency, the number to be eaten in a day may vary from three to six.

A healthy condition of the body depends upon a perfect balance of foods taken. There are many other factors entering into the question, but this feature must not be forgotten. Few people there are who can keep healthy without fruit.

How absurd, some one says, to be told to eat fruit when everybody eats it. Yes, but how do you eat it? Do you take a definite amount of it, the same as you do of meat and potatoes, or do you eat it as you do candy?

If you suffer from an acute attack of indigestion after a dinner of soup, meats, pickles, sauces, salad, cakes, pastries, with spices and condiments enough to blister the skin, to say nothing of the delicate lining of the stomach, pray do not aver that indigestion arises from the morsel of fruit taken at the end.

Be honest with your stomach for a month. Eat no more than you need of simple food, into which the true luxuries of nature, such as apples, oranges, pears or other fruit shall enter. Try, if only as an interesting experiment, to eat sparingly of the cruder articles of diet, and more of those suited to your real needs, and see to it that fruit forms a part of each meal.

"But there are so many kinds of fruit that I cannot eat."

"There it is again. Because you cannot eat seventeen kinds of food at one meal ending with fruit, it, of course, was the apple or the strawberries that did the harm."

"But doesn't fruit make the blood thin?"

"It certainly does, and we are mighty glad of it. Ask any doctor who has practiced medicine for ten years with his eyes open, and he will tell you that the great majority of grown-up folks have blood too thick.

"The minerals and natural acid of the fruit are the very best conceivable remedies for this thickened condition of the blood. Fruit then becomes both a fruit and a medicine—a necessity and a most delightful luxury.

About Catching Cold.

Cold weather lowers the vitality and in that way renders the body less able to resist the effect of the outside conditions. This also makes the system liable to be stormed by microbes. Pneumonia invariably attacks people whose vitality is lowered from some cause or the other—excessive exertion, excessive worry, even excessive grief, which is a very potent factor in lowering vitality. Sometimes a neglected cold will help to produce the disease, and so will the missing meal while one is more or less run down through the strain of business or other excitement. In the ordinary way, pneumonia by itself does not prove fatal, except in the case of very old or very young people. The danger arises when it is complicated by heart or kidney disease. If these organs are healthy at the time that the disease sets in, the patient invariably recovers, unless he has exhausted himself at the beginning f the attack by being about the house when he should have been in bed.

It has been found by experience that while the harmful microbes grow in the mouth, many others also have their habitation there whose offices are to protect the body, as it were, from these microscopic foes. In the winter these "beneficent microbes," as they have been called, do not flourish to the same extent as they do in warmer weather, so that the mouth and, through the mouth, the rest of the body is left without its protectors, and if the individual does not by care come to the rescue of his body, he renders himself liable to be attacked not the less seriously because his foes are invisible. While the ordinary "beneficent microbe" does not flourish in cold weather so well, the microbe of pneumonia does, and grows active at a temperature which is practically fatal to the other.

That is the scientific solution of how one catches cold. How to cure it? Ask the first man you meet.

To-Morrow Will Be or To-Morrow Is?

A dispute over the question whether you should say 'To-morrow will be Thursday" or "To-morrow is Thursday" is needless, for either expression is allowable. "To-morrow will be Thursday" means that, looking forward from to-day as the point of view, the speaker thinks of to-morrow as a future time, and says of it that it "will be" Thursday; "To-morrow is Thursday" means that, without any reference to to-day, the speaker thinks of a certain day as "to-morrow," and says of it that it "is" Thursday.—Elizabeth S. Withey, in Ladies' Home Journal.

New Story of Lincoln.

Two men were looking over some steel engravings in an up-town shop the other day with a view to purchase. A portrait of Lincoln suggested to one of them this story of Honest Abe, which the narrator says he had from his father:

Lincon and his Cabinet were in session, but as he had anticipated no discussions of importance, the President left word that he would receive cards. As he supposed, the meeting was wholly social.

While they were gathering about the table a servant brought in two cards, and Lincoln commanded that the callers be admitted. When they appeared he found one to be a tall, spare man, the other one much undersized. After a moment's chat they retired.

"There is a remarkable instance of the providence of the Creator," remarked Lincoln, impressively, as he turned again to his Ministers. "There are two men. God has given one man extraordinarily long legs and the other extraordinarily short legs, yet He has made the legs of each of those men so that they just exactly reach the ground!"—New York Times.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold ?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am,

Truly yours,
EDWARD LYNCH.
