RIDING THE HORSES TO WATER.

When the clover bloom whitened the pastures,
The wheat fields gleamed bright in the sun,
When the meadow lark, hid by the roadside,
Sang in joy of a new day begun—
When the wild rose bloomed in the thicket,
Half hid by the tall, dewey grass,
To ride the horses to water—
A barefooted laddie and lass.

When the sun trailed his crimson and purple
Behind the tall poplar trees,
When the bird note was hushed in the thicket,
And the clover bloom dreamed of its bees,
We hastened away to the meadow,
Down the path, thro' the soft, warm grass,
To ride the horses to water—
A barefooted laddie and lass.

Oh, my beautiful clover-starred meadow,
How far off you seem today!
And you, little path on the hillside,
Were never so far away;
My heart ever cries for the children
And the stir of the wind blown grass,
As they rode the horses to water—
A barefooted laddie and lass.

Rules of Politeness.

1. To be polite is to have a kind regard for the feelings and rights of others.

2. Be as polite to your parents, brothers, sisters and schoolmates as you are to strangers.

3. Look people fairly in the eyes when you speak to them or they speak to you.

4. Do not bluntly contradict any one.

5. It is not discourteous to refuse to do wrong.

6. Whispering, laughing, chewing gum, or eating at lectures, in school, or at places of amusement, is rude and vulgar.

7. Be doubly careful to avoid any rudeness to strangers, such as calling out to them, laughing, or making remarks about them. Do not stare at visitors.

8. In pen, pencil, knife, or pointer, hand the blunt end toward the one who receives it.

"Can I get to the next town before dark?"
"I reckon."
"'Bout three miles, ain't it?"
"I reckon."
"And a rough road?"
"I reckon."
"My friend," said the traveler, "do you do anything else besides reckon?"
"I reckon I does!" replied the man, as he climbed the rail fence and shuffled homewards.

Shingles and Shingle Nails.

M. S. Perkins, in Country Gentleman.

I wish to say just a word on the subject of shingling. Farmers and stockmen, from the nature of their occupations, require large, commodious barns, sheds, pens, coops, etc. All these buildings must be covered with some cheap, effective, water-tight material, and wooden shingles, taking the country as a whole and conditions that generally prevail, are esteemed most practicable for the purpose. The best cedar shingles are the most economical in the end, as they can be laid much faster and are far more certain to make a tight roof than the cheaper grades containing knots that are most sure to give trouble, sooner or later. Buy the grade marked "Extra," and do not begrudge the "extra" cost.

Now comes a very vital point, namely, the kind of nail to be used to fasten the shingles. This matter has received very sure and practical demonstration. Never use a wire nail of any description. Be sure to employ a cut nail every time. Furthermore, use an iron cut nail of proper size; not a steel cut nail. The wire nail will not stand the moisture conditions which prevail on a roof. It is slim, rapidly corrodes under dampness, and very often will drop shingles that have been laid less than five years, shingles that have not seen one-third their period of usefulness. This makes it very expensive, and I know of many losses of this kind that are to be traced to the use of the wire nail.

The steel cut nail while vastly better for the purpose than the wire, is very inferior to the iron nail. Steel corrodes much faster than iron. This has been demonstrated beyond a shadow of a doubt in the case of steam boiler tubes, as well as with roof coverings. I myself recently was working on an old roof, removing old shingles that had been laid thirty years, and replacing them with new ones. This was shingled with the old fashioned iron nail, and this nail was tough and strong, necessitating much effort in taking off the old shingles.

This matter of shingle nails is no notion of mine, and I cannot emphasize it too strongly, as I have seen the wire advocated but a short time since in a certain newspaper article, whereas I positively know that to use a wire nail in shingling will invariably result in financial loss.

Manager—Is he intelligent enough to take the part?

Assistant—Why, he is intelligent enough to have written the play.

"That's no sign."
