A NONSENSE CALENDAR.

It seems very sad
That the March Hare is mad,
For he does such ridiculous things;
He stands on his head,
And he dances in bed,
And he ties up his long ears with strings.

He carries a cane
For fear it will rain;
His whiskers he stiffens with starch;
And it 's my own belief
That he is a thief;
For once the March Hare stole a March!
—Carolyn Wells in March St. Nicholas.

BUGLE CALLS.

BY CAPTAIN DRAYLE.

One day when Company B of the Seventh was returning from a scout after hostile Indians a boy of ten who had been hiding in a dry ditch suddenly leaped up before the horses. His story was the familiar one. An emigrant camp had been beset by the hostiles at night, a score of men, women and children wiped out, and the boy had escaped, he knew not how. The soldiers claimed the orphan as their own, and in away Company B adopted him.

For the first year or two it was feared that relatives might turn up or that the colonel would send him away to be adopted and cared for by civilians, but these calamities did not happen. The boy gave his name as Stanley Martin, and so the chaplain wrote it down in making a record, but the soldiers called him Billy from the first day to the last. He was a bright, cheerful youngster, by nature, and after time had blunted his grief no one laughed oftener than Billy. The petting he received from the men of the company would have spoiled most kids, but it made Billy none the worse. He might have picked up profanity, selfishness and braggadocio, but he never did. He was encouraged to smoke and chew, but he did not fall into those bad habits. At the age of twelve he was better educated than some of the corporals, and at fourteen the commissary took him on as a clerk.

How it was arranged does not matter, but a year later Billy became Company's B's bugler. He had been a pupil until he could be taught nothing more. His bugle calls were music to the whole regiment, and let others wind the horn as they might their notes could deceive no one. And at fifteen he was as fresh faced and honest looking a lad as any father or mother could have wished to call son. There wasn't an officer in the regiment who wouldn't have been glad to chip in for a purse to send the boy to some school in the states and give him a show to make his way in civil life, but Billy had determined on a soldier's career and begged to be permitted to stay with the Seventh.

Soon after his promotion the Indians, who had somehow held on to themselves for four or five years, dug up the hatchet and took to the warpath. News reached Fort McPherson after a bit that a band of them were raiding down Smoky Valley. There were but two companies at the fort just then, and they held themselves in readiness to be ordered out at any moment. It was six miles from the post over to the valley, and many a time during the days of peace Billy had mounted the Indian pony given him by the quartermaster and ridden over to Wharton's ranch. Wharton himself was jolly and good natured, his wife was motherly and kind hearted, and their daughter Kate, a year younger than the bugler, was handsome enough to set any boy's heart fluttering. The soldiers caught on after awhile and had their jokes at Billy's expense, but they did not go too far. Even the roughest of the men always respected the boy's feelings. He blushed and stammered when they laughed at his love affair, but he went just as often to Wharton's.

One day, and for the first time, he was sent there officially. The hostiles were taking in the whole length of the valley, beating back or dodging the forces sent out, and if the Whartons did not seek the shelter of the fort they were certain to fall victims within a day or two. Other settlers had come in, but Wharton argued that the marauders would turn back before his place was reached. The colonel of the Seventh had written him also a peremptory order to come in without an hour's delay, and Billy was the messenger deputed to carry it. He had a fast pony, was a good rider and had a cool head, and it was argued that he would be several hours ahead of danger. A light Winchester and a belt of cartridges were given him, and it was only when he was on his way that any one noticed the bugle slung to his back. He rode at a fast pace and reached Wharton's without adventure. The message must have convinced the ranchman of the necessity of haste, for he brought up his wagon and began loading it with household effects. It was while thus engaged that the Indians came upon him.

Billy had left the fort at 10 o'clock in the forenoon. It could be figured out that if Wharton refused to come the boy would be back at half past 12 at the latest. If Wharton accompanied him back, then it might be an hour later. It came 1 o'clock, and it came 2 and 3, and there was no sign of Billy. Then the colonel ordered out Company B for a scout. There were only seventy men, but it was believed they could take care of any force likely to be met with that far down the valley. The orders were to ride on until they found the boy, and the troop was no sooner clear of the stockade than the horses were put to the gallop. They hoped to meet Billy before the crest of Snake hill was reached, but when a halt was made on the summit to breathe the horses and the troopers looked down upon Wharton's ranch, still three miles away, a dozen men cried out in chorus:

"Look! Look! The redskins have jumped the ranch and are burning the house."

Clouds of smoke were arising from three or four points on the ranch property, but after a minute it was seen that sheds and stacks only had been fired and that the house itself was still intact. But as the soldiers used their naked eyes and the officers their glasses to locate the redskins the sounds of rifle shots came floating up to them, followed by the notes of a bugle. Bugler Billy was sounding "Boots and saddles!" as a call for aid.

Company B had brought along a supernumerary bugler. The captain nodded to him. He dismounted, climbed the big bowlder which was a landmark and from its crest sent the stirring notes back across the valley to tell the beleaguered ones that rescue was at hand. Then as he touched the saddle again the troop went thundering down the eastern slope to fall upon the Indians red handed. It reached the valley, it had formed platoon front, the carbines had been unslung, when up rose 200 warriors to bar its further progress and its retreat and drive it to cover on the right. Ten saddles had been emptied before cover was reached. The Indians had set a trap, and the troopers had galloped into it. For half an hour the hostiles pressed the attack so vigorously that it seemed as if the troop must be wiped out, but the cool and steady fire of the soldiers finally cleared the foe away, and rifle and carbine ceased their racket for a time.

As silence fell came the notes of Billy's bugle to tell his comrades that he was still alive and knew of their near presence. Again he was answered, but the men shook their heads and cursed and muttered. It was plain to them that the boy and the Whartons were beset in the ranchhouse by twenty to one and just as plain that they were helpless to aid them. The Indians had simply fallen back to cover instead of retreating. The troop was surrounded and shut in, and to attempt to break out of the circle meant a massacre.

Now began a fierce attack on the ranchhouse that lasted for half an hour. When the firing had died away, Billy's bugle calls floated across the level to tell his comrades that the fort still held out, and they were answered with wild cheers. Twice again before the sun went down the Indians made fierce attacks on the intrenched troopers, to be driven back, and twice and thrice they renewed the attacks on the house. Again after the attack at 6 o'clock Billy's bugle calls were heard, but three-quarters of an hour later the troopers sprang up and exclaimed to each other:

"Those are not Billy's notes! Some one else is sounding the call!"

"'Tis Wharton's daughter!" whispered the old first sergeant.

"Our Billy has taught her to blow the bugle. Comrades, our boy lies dead or wounded."

Thirty minutes later, as the red rim of the summer sun was sinking out of sight, there came a last call from the ranchhouse. It was from the lips of the girl again. Just then silence fell upon the valley, or the low and quavering notes might not have reached the ears of the troopers. The girl was blowing the call of "Lights out!"

"God! God!" sobbed the men as they listened and realized what the notes meant.

"She is the last to die!" whispered the captain as he turned away his head.

Under cover of darkness the hostiles drew off and were thirty miles away when morning came. Then the troopers closed in on the battered, half burned ranchhouse and sat with bared heads while their officers went inside.

"Not a cartridge left and all dead!" said the captain as he came out, with his hat in his hand. "It was the girl who lived longest, and it was she who blew 'Lights out!' when all hope was gone. God rest them!"

"She may have a temper, but she is interesting. Did she ever get over the death of her first husband?" "Yes! but her second husband is inconsolable."

A Few Interesting Notes of Niagara.

The sublime magnificence and superb beauty of Niagara Falls far surpasses any description that can be given. To see them on a bright, cloudless day is then to realize how glorious and powerful is their grandeur and how marvelous the strange rock formation. It is here that a few of the mysteries of nature are revealed to us. Scientists have estimated that it has taken from 35,000 to 75,000 years for the falls to have reached their present location from Lewiston, a distance of seven miles. To "cut away the corraline limestone and other varieties of stone which are found in the gorge" it has taken these restless waters all of these centuries.

The Horseshoe Fall is noted for its exquisite green color, which is caused by its height of 158 feet. A superb view of this is obtained by taking the water trip in the little steamer, "The Maid of the Mist," which takes you around into the bend of the fall, where the ceaseless and mighty roar of the rushing water is appalling, and fills one with an indescribable terror, so that a sigh of relief escapes when once again you touch terra firma. In these trips there is something almost uncanny, as you watch the little steamer leave, with each person on board enveloped in black waterproof cloaks, the face only being visbile, and as it disappears from view into the mist you feel as if it were a phantom, and with bated breath watch for its reappearance.

The wildness and sublimity of this scenery are not fully appreciated until the famous Great Gorge ride is taken. This electric road is one of the most wonderful and gigantic feats of engineering of the nineteenth century, and its safe accomplishment has astonished the world.

A man left his umbrella in the stand in a hotel recently with a card bearing the following inscription attached to it:

"This umbrella belongs to a man who can deal a blow of 250 pounds weight. I shall be back in ten minutes."

On returning to seek his property he found in its place a card thus inscribed:

"This card was left here by a man who can run twelve miles an hour. I shall not be back!"

"My boy," said the old gentlemam in a very kihdly tone, "there's only one thing that stands between you and success."

"And what is that?" asked the youth.

"If you worked as hard at working," explained the old gentleman, "as you do at trying to find some way to avoid working, you would soon be rich."

The minister made one mistake when he wuz preachin' Bill Bremmer's funeral sermon."

"What was that, Abner?"

"He said dat Bill always seen his duty afar off."

"Didn't he? Of course, he didn't. Bill was the durndest near-sighted fellow in the township."

The man who figures that at some future time he will be happy has a wrong idea of things. In order to be happy he must learn to live one day at a time and learn to cash in some happiness every twenty-four hours.

Bread cast upon the waters will surely return; but the trouble is that most people expect the bread to be spread with butter and jam when it returns.

Wall Paper! Wall Paper!

I wish to call the attention of my friends and the public in general to the fact that I now am ready to show one of the ever exhibited in this county, bought direct from the factory, in full bundle lots, so you get it only from second hands, no two or three profits coming off it. Of course the consumer pays them all. Sam Jones says it takes a pointer pup nine days to get his eyes open. I have known some people to get their's open in fifteen minutes in a wall paper deal. They thought it was two pieces instead of one, and the border they did not understand, &c. That is always their plea. Remember I am the only paper hanger in the county that carries a stock and don't have the expense of running a store therefore I have no opposition. Is you think I can't save you money, come and see me and bring size of your room, or send size by mail and I will tell you what your job will cost, and send samples and convince you that Gladhill's is the place to save twenty-five cents on a dollar on all Wall Papers.

Finest and Cheapest Lines of WALL PAPER
