Elijah turned toward the hearth in a blind passion, and seized the iron bar used for a poker. Striding after his father he swung it above his head with both hands. The convict halted in surprise. Instantly the shock of amazement gave place to a look of crafty cunning.

"So we are father and son after all!" he choked with horrible relish, as he dodged the blow and returned to the fireplace. I mistrusted all along you was only your ma's boy, until this minute." The iron clanged to the floor, and the man of God, sinking to his knees beside the table, buried his face in his arms. The resounding crash of the metal brought a quick footstep across the hallway between the rooms, where it paused a moment at the door. Neither man stirred, but even the criminal was something conscious of the tense expectancy overwhelming the kneeling husband. The silence was reassuring for the steps returned to the opposite room, whence the regular swing of a rocking chair declared it's occupant's tranquil thoughts.

By this time the convict had rid himself of his prison shoes and socks, and cautiously creeping to the door locked it and threw the key on the table. He then undressed, rolled his striped uniform into a compact parcel and threw it into the fire, after first heaping it with fresh logs and light-wood chips. He watched the clothes begin to smoke and ignite. When nothing remained but a mound of ashes he raked them down to mingle with the others already in the fireplace. Then he tapped his son's shoulder.

Elijah made no attempt to raise his head. The horrors of the past and present seem to mingle in one inextricable tangle that he was powerless to unravel. All he could think of was pardon for the murderous thoughts of the last few moments. He had never suspected such possibilities in his nature, and felt afraid of himself, as of some strange wild beast. He continued kneeling in a sort of apathy, indifferent alike to his father's presence and his own impotency.

The convict did not hesitate longer. He stooped and dragged off Elijah's congress gaiters and home knit socks and promptly pulled them on his own feet. Having gained other knowledge of the premises than the woodpile during his two days' hiding, he next sought the closet at the end of the room where hung the minister's one other suit of clothes, his Sunday black, dingy and threadbare from long usage. In spite of the trammel of his prison discipline, the convict had remained a coxcomb at heart, and disdainfully examined the suit before assuming it. But, once in it, the dignity of its sober hue seemed to permeate his manner. He was that quality of man who experiences something of the character of his clothes. He squared his shoulders and pulled a long face as he fastened the last button on the coat that had so often officiated behind the pulpit, and there was no denying his claims to looks even with his shaven crown.

The next object of his attention was a three-cornered cupboard in the jamb of the chimney. His fierce curse as he took the key from the trouser pocket and flung wide the door was so loud and blashemous that Elijah sprang to his feet and stared with his father into its shallow depth.

Only this morning he had placed in it for safe keeping the small, plated communion service, with the offering for Thanksgiving that had occurred the Thursday of that eventful week.

The shelves were empty! The church property was stolen!

"Well, parson," sneered his father, "the chink's gone, as sure as pop goes the weasel. And not in my pocket, though you seem to think so."

The minister shivered in his bare feet, unconscious of physical suffering.

"Lord, Bud," coninued the convict contemptuously, "you are your ma's boy, after all. No more of a backbone than she had. But I can't tarry, so fork over what cash you got and I'll mosey along. I couldn't have bided this time only for the dogs losing the scent in the rain."

Elijah mechanically emptied his pockets at this request and handed his father twenty-three cents, his last penny.

"Well!" whistled the convict. "This all you got?"

His son nodded.

"Then religion is a d—— poor paymaster. If I was you, with a new wife, I'd cross the river and join another traveling show."

With that, seizing his son's hat, hanging on a nail near the door, he put it on with a jaunty tilt over the left ear, and, striding to the window, he raised the sash, plunged over the ledge and disappeared into the storm.

Elijah tried to think out what he had best do when the steward had been told and he had been dismissed from preaching the gospel.

Of course, his wife would return to her own people, who were honest and proud, and would never consent to her remaining the companion of a felon's son, now suspected of theft in its most dastardly form.

He was solving this prospect with blood in his heart when a gentle tap at the door interrupted his thoughts. For the first time he was conscious of his bare feet. An unconquerable repugnance to wearing the prison shoes still toasting before the fire led him to wander aimlessly about the room, as if in search of another pair.

"Let me, in Lij.; I'm afraid!" a frightened voice called.

He sprang to the door to find it locked, and lost some moments searching for the key.

His wife, a tall, slender, blue eyed girl, stumbled and fell into his arms. He gathered her to his bosom, and once more sought his chair. The wind sobbed a requiem and the rain dashed against the shutters, but the tempest without was nothing to that raging in the minister's breast, as he sat in the firelight trying to shrive his soul and loose his hold on the heaven in his grasp.

It was done. He had unburdened himself of his secret—the murder of his mother by his father, his own perjury to save his father's life because of her dying prayers, and the long concealment with its crushing end, the robbery of the communion service and the Thanksgiving collection. At the close he said:

It warn't noways right fur me to ast you to merry me, Mame. When I done it I knowed it fur wrong. I kept hoping it would turn out all right, but a man's sins are bound to find him out. Anyhow, a man can sometimes right a wrong. Early Monday morning, honey, I'll drive you over to your ma's, and the best you can do is to fergit the man what done such cruel harm." He tried to loose the clasp of her arms about his neck.

"Lij," she whispered, "you ain't the only one been so mortal wicked."

He smiled faintly, and stroked her corn colored hair, then laughed vacantly. Everything seemed to be unreal.

"Dear, I knowed all your secret before," she confessed. "Your pa told me behind the woodpile the very day we come home from being married." She pansed, but Elijah made no reply beyond a deep sigh. He had never been spared humiliation, and the same merciless fingers had bared his quivering soul to his bride of a few hours. He ast me for money and clothes, but I didn't hev any. And, oh, Lij," she buried her face in his breast, "he made me tell him this morning about the money you had in the house from Thanksgiving. He made me do it, he truly did! He held my hands fierce, and said if I didn't mind he would carry me in those striped clothes right to your very face. And then he made me tell him where was the key to the cupboard, but folks was coming in and out so much all day he didn't git no chance to in the house. He was mortal feared of them catching him in them clothes.

"But he got that money!" Elijah caught his breath with something like a sob. "It's gone with the supper service. He lied about it—said he didn't—but thet's no difference. He'd always ruther lie."

"Lij, dear, soon as I could get away from your pa in the woodpile I carried thet money and supper service right over to Steward Rogerses and ast him to keep it fur a day or so, as I didn't feel safe to watch them and you out of the house. He alowed I was right, and he's got them. I didn't tell you about them before, Lij—"

The silence fell so long and deep between them that Mame sobbed nervously:

"Lij, be you mad?"

"Mad?" The man of God kissed her reverently, and rising from his seat, he worshipped:—"Blessed be the Lord who has raised up salvation fur his servant!"

Employer—Just file these letters for me, will you, Patrick?

Employee—Oi can trim them off aisier with a pair of scissors, sor.

Lawyer—The jury has brought in a sealed verdict in your case.

Prisoner—Well, tell the court that they needn't open it on my account.

Editor—Was Longwynde's sermon exhaustive?

Reporter—Exhaustive? You never saw an audience so nearly worn out in your life.

Jaggles—Are these relatives of yours near or distant?

Waggles—The ones who have any money are very distant.

She—"Tom, dear, before I get you your birthday present I want you to tell me how much you can afford to pay for it."

Cholly—"Why, Mabel, I haven't seen you in an age." Mabel—"You horrid thing! How dare you talk of age to me."

DAYS OF ABSENCE.

Days of absence, sad and dreary,
Clothed in sorrow's dark array;
Days of absence, I am weary,
She I love is far away.
When the heavy sigh be banish'd:
When this bosom cease to mourn?
Hours of bliss, too quickly vanish,
When will angel-like you return?

Not till that loved voice can greet me,
Which so oft has charmed mine ear,
Not till those sweet eyes can meet me,
Telling that I still am dear:
Days of absence then will vanish,
Joy will all my pangs repay:
Soon my bosom's idol banish
Gloom, but felt when she's away.

All my love is turned to sadness,
Absence pays the tender vow,
Hopes that filled the heart with gladness
Memory turns to anguish now:
Love may yet return to greet me,
Hope may take the place of pain;
Antoinette with kisses meet me
Breathing love and peace again.
—Jean Jacques Rousseu.

Uses of Turpentine.

Turpentine, either in resinous form or in spirits, has a household value. A child suffering with the croup or any throat or lung difficulty will be quickly relieved by inhaling the vapor and having the chest rubbed until the skin is red and then being wrapped about with flannel moistened with fiery spirits. Afterward sweet oil will save the skin from irritation. In the case of burns and scalds turpentine has no equal. It is the best dressing for patent leather; it will remove paint from artists' clothes and workmen's garments; it will drive away moths if a few drops are put into closets and chests; it will persuade mice to find other quarters if a little is poured into the mouse holes; one tablespoonful added to the water in which linens are boiled will make the goods wonderfully white; a few drops will prevent starch from sticking; mixed with bees wax it makes the best floor polish, and mixed with sweet oil it is unrivaled as a polish for fine furniture; the latter mixture should be two parts of sweet oil to one part of turpentine. Some physicians recommend spirits of turpentine, applied externally, for lumbago and rheumatism. It is also prescribed for neuralgia of the face.—Woman's Home Companion.

A Farm Or $600 A Year.

A man on a good quarter section of land was complaining because he had not made anything the past year and expressed regret that his brother, who was a clerk in a town bank at a salary of $600 a year, was so much better off than he was. A friend did a little figuring for him and easily proved that he was all wrong in his conclusions. It figured out something like this: The bank clerk got $600, out of which he had to pay $180 for rent of house, leaving $420 with which to meet all the other many expenses of living for himself, wife and three children. He really had hard work to make both ends meet. The brother on the farm had had his house rent, the best board for himself, wife and three children and wife's mother, their clothing and all household comforts. There was a new $400 barn which had been built; there were ten head more cattle, thirteen more hogs and three more colts than a year previous, a new surrey in the barn and $150 worth of new machinery, all either produced on the farm or paid for from the products raised on the farm during the year. "Hold on," said the farmer. "I see that I am an old fool."

Farmer Hayseed—"I jes' tell you this 'ere edication ain't no good to a young man at all; jes' spoils 'em."

Visitor—"Think so?"

Farmer Hayseed—"Huh! Know so. Do you know Bill Smikes? Don't? He lives in that 'ere white house over the hill. Well, Smikes had a boy he was bound to edicate, an' he did, too—sent him through the hull business, frills and all, and mortgaged his farm to do it. Well, sir, that boy come back from college such a dum fool that he was accepted as a juror in a murder trial."

Mr. Goodcatch (calling on the eldest sister)—"Why, Johnny, how you are growing. You'll be a man before your sister, if you keep on."

Johnny—"You bet I will. Sister'll never be a man if she keeps on being twenty like she has for the last five years."

Then there was trouble in the household.

The burglar softly opened the door of the suburbanite's sleeping apartment, slipped inside and searched the room thoroughly, but found nothing worth stealing.

"I'll get some satisfaction out of him, anyway!" he said.

Thereupon he set the alarm clock on the bureau for the hour of 3 and and softly departed.

She (indignantly)—"Sir, what do you mean by putting your arm around my waist?"

He (meekly)—Why, I—er thought you wouldn't object."

She—"Well, I do—and I'll give you just three hours in which to remove it."

Visitor—"And aren't you going to send your son to college, Mrs. Brisk?" Mrs. B.—"No; we've concluded it's useless. His hair is so thin that there's no hope of his ever getting on the football team."

When a man suffers from dyspepsia his wife deserves a lot of pity.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very trouble some cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,
