NO. 4063 EQUITY.

Sarah Jane Virginia Schaeffer, executrix of Samuel D. Buchen; Sarah Jane Virginia Schaeffer and Joseph Schaeffer, her husband, and Elizabeth Buchen, Plaintiffs, vs. Henry Z. Buchen, Jr., Margaret S. Sprinkle and Jesse Sprinkle, her husband, Defendants.

The object of the bill of complaint in this cause is to obtain a decree for the sale of certain real estate situate in the town of Hampstead, Carroll county, Maryland.

The bill states that one Samuel D. Buchen, sometimes called Samuel Z. Buchen, late of said Carroll county, deceased, was at the time of his death seized in equal undivided interests and estate of one-third each with the defendants Margaret S. Sprinkle and Henry Z. Buchen, as tenants in common in fee simple in and to a parcel of land containing one-half acre, more or less, comprising two lots situate on Main street of the town of Hampstead, in Carroll county, and State of Maryland.

That the said Samuel D. Buchen, by his last will devised his said interest and estate in said parcel of land to the plaintiff, Elizabeth Buchen, his widow, and to the plaintiff, Sarah Jane Virginia Schaeffer, his daughter, and in said will empowered his executrix, Sarah Jane Virginia Schaeffer, to sell said estate in said land.

That said Elizabeth Buchen and Sarah Jane Virginia Schaeffer now hold said interest and estate, so devised to them, subject to said power of sale, undivided and in common with the above named defendants.

That said land is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury to the parties entitled thereto. That the defendants, Margaret S. Sprinkle and Jesse Sprinkle, two of the defendants, are non-residents of the State of Maryland.

And the bill of complaint prays a decree be passed for the sale of said land and for distribution of the proceeds arising from such sale amongst the persons entitled thereto, according to their respective interests.

It is thereupon, this third day of September, 1903, by the Circuit Court for Carroll county, sitting as a Court of Equity, ordered that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Carroll county, Maryland, once in each of four successive weeks before the fifth day of October, A. D., 1903, give notice to the said defendants who are non-residents of the State of Maryland, of the object and substance of the bill of complaint in this cause, warning them and each of them to appear in this court, in person or by solicitor, on or before the 26th day of October, A. D., 1903, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed in the bill.

JOHN T. ROYER,

From the Altoona Pa., Tribune.

Henry C. Dern, Sr.

AN HONEST CAREER CLOSED.

Mr. Henry C. Dern, Sr., treasurer and general manager of the Altoona Tribune company, died at his residence, 1321 Eleventh street, Altoona, Pa., at about 4 o'clock Tuesday morning, September 8th. Death came in the still hours and the discovery was made by his devoted wife, who for almost fifty years had been his faithful companion and helpmeet. Mr. Dern had not been in good health for some months past, yet he continued his daily visits to the office and did the work which for years had been done by him on Monday last. On that evening he retired to his home at his usual hour. At about 12.30 Tuesday morning he awoke and complained of a severe pain in his chest. A remedy which had often been used previously with good effect was administered by his wife and he again retired to bed and sank into sleep. It was the sleep which has no earthly awakening, and during it life gradually passed away, and the soul leaving its tenement of clay returned to its maker. Death was the result of heart failure.

The suddenness of his death came as a great shock to the members of his family. So also did it to the business community, of which he had for so many years been an active and progressive member. So, too, was it to the employes in the office of which he had for so many years been the honored head. A man slow to make up his mind until all sides were weighed, his advice was always good. The truth of this was attested many times in business transactions. As a friend he was loyal, as a counsellor he seldom erred, as a member of the community he was respected by all, as a husband he was ever loyal and as a father ever kind. His long life was spent in an honorable and upright manner and his career is one which is worthy of emulation.

Mr. Henry C. Dern, Sr., was the son of Isaac and Susan Dern and was born at Double Pipe Creek, Carroll county, Md., March 9, 1830, and was therefore aged 73 years, 5 months and 29 days. He was reared principally at Middleburg, Carroll county, where he received his education in the schools of that day. When he was in his 17th year he left his home and went to Westminster, the county seat of Carroll county, and entered the office of the Carroll County Democrat as an apprentice. This paper was issued weekly by Joseph M. Parke and J. T. H. Bringman. There he remained until he had gained a knowledge of the printing business, when he removed to New Bloomfield, Perry county, and for two years was employed in the office of the Perry County Democrat. After working at his trade in Philadelphia and Baltimore for some time, he journeyed to Cincinnati in the fall of 1855 and secured a position as compositor on the Commercial. Before a year had expired, however, he returned to New Bloomfield where he married and resided until May, 1858. He then came to Altoona and purchased from William M. Allison a half interest in the Altoona Tribune, the other half interest being owned by E. B. McCrum. It was under the firm name of McCrum & Dern that for eighteen years these gentlemen published the Tribune. On January 20, 1876, Mr. McCrum retired from the firm and Mr. Dern associated his nephew, Dr. Hugh Pitcairn, now consul general at Hamburg, Germany, with himself in the publication of the Tribune. The firm was known as Dern & Pitcairn for many years or until January 1, 1899, when it was incorporated as the Altoona Tribune Company, being composed of H. C. Dern, Sr., Dr. Hugh Pitcairn, H. C. Dern, Jr., Frank and Norman Pitcairn. At a subsequent meeting these officers were elected: President, Dr. Hugh Pitcairn; treasurer and general manager, H. C. Dern, Sr.; vice president, H. C. Dern, Jr.; secretary, A. D. Houck. On April 14, 1873, the first number of the Morning Tribune was issued by McCrum & Dern. It was issued for two years when it was discontinued until January 28, 1878, when it was revived by Dern & Pitcairn. It has appeared regularly ever since.

From the time of his becoming a citizen of Altoona he was actively identified with its progress. As a member of the school board he served twelve years; for five years he was a member of the borough council and was one of the first members of the council after the borough became a city. For years he was a member of the board of directors of the Altoona Gas company, was the president of the Edison Electric Light company, and a member of the board of directors in the City Passenger Railway company and finally disposed of his holdings in these organizations. He was also president of the Altoona Bank until that institution was merged in the Central Pennsylvania Trust Company. He was active in the establishment of the Altoona hospital and from its organization was a member of the board of trustees. He was also prominently identified with building and loan associations, being president of the Franklin at the time of his death. He was a member and an officer in the Fairview Cemetery association.

The deceased was a member of the Presbyterian Church, was president of its board of deacons and also a trustee. At one time he was chosen by the congregation to the office of elder, but declined to serve.

For many years he had been identified with the Masonic Fraternity and at the time of his death was a member of Mountain Lodge No. 281, Free and Accepted Masons; Mountain Council No. 9, Royal and Select Masters, and Mountain Commandery No. 10, Knights Templar.

August 14, 1856, Mr. Dern was united in marriage with Miss Rebecca Witherow, daughter of John Witherow, of Perry county. TOO MUCH HIAWATHA.

—o:o—

Then the band played Hiawatha,
Played it up and down the highways,
Tooted it along the byways;
At park concerts played it loudly;
Played itself back from the graveyard
To the ever haunting measure,
While the people who will whistle
Joined in misfit key the chorus,
And e'en some dared raise their voices
In a dee-de-dum-ti-dumdum,
Lacking words to grace their meaning,
Or, it may be, lacking meaning;
At pianos idly thumping
Tender maidens also played it—
Till the atmosphere resounded
With the strains of Hiawatha.

Then, when shades of night had fallen,
And the push was silent, tired out,
Then, ah, then, we found with sorrow
That it all had been for nothing,
All our suffering for nothing,
For of all the ardent tooters,
All the whistlers so persistent,
All the hummers cracked or raucous,
All the thumpers of pianos,
Not one of the whole blamed outfit
Had in one erratic measure
Struck the note that killed mosquitoes;
And, throughout the long night's darkness,
Still the insects buzzed about us
That same tune with variations,
So much suffering is futile!

FUGITIVES.

—o:o—

Maynard was so steeped in his own misery that he never even noticed the presence of the girl until she laughed. Forgetting everything else, even the weakness of hunger, he had flung himself down upon the dirt floor, thankful to be out of that bitter wind which for hours had swept against his face, and buffeted him back, until every muscle of his body felt sore and bruised. He wanted nothing now so much as to lie still and breathe. But that laugh, brief and joyless as it was, seemed so inharmonious, so utterly out of place in that cheerless hut almost within the Arctic circle, that it came to him now as a physical blow. He lifted his eyes, yet heavy with the snow glare, and, almost at the same moment, flung himself forward. For an instant two human forms struggled desperately in that semi-darkness, then Maynard slowly forced the other back, and looked down into the glaring eyes.

"Curse you, O'Brien," he said coldly, and the helpless man he addressed seemed to shrink back from the look in his face. "If you attempt anything like that again I'll throttle you like a dog."

"But she's got food, Jack," the voice almost whined, it was so piteous. "I saw it back of the curtain there."

The other turned partially around to look, his hand still heavy on the prostrate man, and for the first time saw the girl. Roughened as he was by long years on the frontier, gambler and gun-fighter, there was that yet in Jack Maynard that compelled him to exhibit respect for a woman. No one would have called this one pretty, yet there was that about her which would lead a man to look twice if they met in a crowd—a slender woman, and her face seemed very pale, it was framed with such a wealth of dark hair. Someway her eyes interested Jack; he felt vaguely that he had seen them somewhere before.

"Are you hungry?" she asked, as he sat there and stared at her.

"We have eaten nothing since yesterday morning," he answered hoarsely. "He is crazed by what he has passed through."

Whatever she might be, this she understood. In quick silence, her dark eyes full of pity, she handed out what she had, and, drawing back into the deeper shadow, watched the famished men eat. It was not much, but to them it was as the gift of the gods.

Suddenly Maynard paused and looked up.

"What made you laugh?" he asked.

"I hardly know," she said wearily; "I think I was nervous and you came in so suddenly."

His eyes were riveted upon her face.

"I have it now," he said quickly, "you are Jessie Cole."

A faint flush sprang into her cheeks.

"It has taken you some time to guess." she answered, a bit of sarcasm in the soft inflection of her voice. "I had supposed I was well known in Dawson."

He bowed gravely, feeling somehow that her manner compelled a respect that he could not account for, considering everything he had formerly thought of her.

"I have never been interested in things theatrical," he said in explanation, and merely recognized you from your lithographs."

Then he added quietly:

"I certainly had no reason to expect meeting you here alone."

She lifted her head, and faced him almost proudly.

"You say you feel no interest in theatrical life," and her words were clearly distinct, and "possibly you possess but small respect for any woman who is compelled to earn a living in that profession. Doubtless your Alaska experience has not added greatly to your charity in this respect. If this be so, then you will scarcely comprehend my motive when I say that I am here alone, and have been for five days, by my own deliberate choice—that I preferred solitude, yes, even death itself, with the bare possibility of being overtaken by honorable men, rather than continue longer in company with those with whom I traveled."

She hesitated, and he sat watching her in silence.

"Whether you are honorable men," she continued calmly, "I do not yet know."

For the first time in years a red flush sprang into the man's face. "You may, indeed, have cause to doubt it," he replied, almost harshly, but without hesitation, "when I tell you I am Jack Maynard."

He was conscious of her quick breath of surprise, and it hurt him, yet he went sternly on with all he had to say.

"Moreover, we left Dawson in something of a hurry, and there is doubtless, a posse on our trail."

It was almost totally dark there under that low snow-covered roof, and he could not distinguish her features clearly, but the light of the one flickering candle, which O'Brien had ignited, fell full upon his face, and she felt the strength of it.

"You are running away?" she asked, as if not fully comprehending. "You are fugitives? Then you will go right on and leave me here?"

He wondered almost sadly, which she would prefer, but his response was direct.

"We shall do nothing of the kind."

"You will not?" her voice had a quick note of alarm.

"No. May I ask, do you chance to know Tom Briggs?"

She shuddered slightly at the name, and he could feel that she shrank back from him.

"I thought, probably, the name would be familiar. Well, I have every reason to suppose that Briggs heads the gang that is after me; a sweet officer of the law, isn't he? And you can bet that every man in his posse will be from his own class. Now, madam, no doubt you think poorly enough of me, but I'll give you one pointer straight—I'm not hound enough to leave you in the hands of those fellows. The Lord knows I wouldn't make much show as a saint, but I had a mother once, and a sister, and I never yet went back on a woman; nor do I reckon I will now. Anyhow, Miss, I propose to get you down to the coast, or else Alaska will have some funerals." And he patted the stock of a gun that lay beside him.

It is hard to tell just what, but there was an intensity of feeling in his voice and manner that impressed her with sincerity. Perhaps it was the actress in her, but instantly she stepped forward and held out her hand. The man took it almost awkwardly, and then neither seemed to know what ought to be said.

"But surely you do not wish that we remain here?" she questioned at last, almost timidly.

"No, this miserable hut offers no defence; besides if we press on we may succeed in reaching Shepherd's before the posse can come up. We had all of ten hours the start out of Dawson, but they will have dogs."

Scarcely thirty minutes later they were without and pressing rapidly southward, keeping with difficulty the dim trail half hidden by drifting snow. The two men dragged wearily at the ropes of the single sled, upon which they had hastily placed their small stock of provisions—O'Brien doggedly, his head bent low and his whole attitude that of a beast of burden, but Maynard faced the blast as though a new life and purpose had been born to him, and plowed through the drifts with the strength of a giant, seeking as he advanced to make a path in which the girl behind might follow. In spite of his urging she
