riedly. "I shall be late at meeting, and I'm detaining you. Good-by. I hope you'll—do something for the little one. Good-by, Rosy. You mustn't come back to my house any more—mind!"

After the service Mrs. Halleck started home by way of the gap. There she came upon her son and Rosy and the cat.

"Well, said Halleck, angrily, "she's come back! I haven't spoken to her. You can. You can tell her to light out."

Rosy got down obediently at a motion from her friend. Her little face said: Why shouldn't she sit on the wall with the man and watch the crows? Why should he be angry and stamp his foot at her? She laid hold of Mrs. Halleck's dress, and kept close to her on the way to the house.

"I told you not to come back," Mrs. Halleck said, when they were alone. Didn't I, Rosy?"

"You are a troublesome baby. And if you don't mind what is said, they will send you off to the poorhouse."

Without warning, down went Rosy on the grass, and the wails of broken-hearted childhood rent the air.

Mrs. Halleck stood above her perplexed.

"Rosy!" she said, presently; Rosy!"

"Yes, ma'am," sobbed the stricken child.

"What do you want of us?"

"I want to love you," came the answer.

Mrs. Halleck sat down on the grass, took the child in her lap and rocked silently to and fro. Just then her son passed, unnoticed. Something in the sight checked his irritated steps; something in the droop of the thin arms, the faded cheek against the sound, tinted tear-stained one. A world of helpless loneliness expressed itself in the posture.

"Why, she's old!" he thought. "And she's coddling the child; she wants to keep it!"

He walked on to a clump of lilacs near the door. His brows were knit, his hands shut tightly. Then the power within, the spirit of darkness which prompts the cruel word, the brutal deed, turned him short about and brought him back to the woman and the child, still on the grass in a close embrace.

Yes she was old, and she wanted the child, but it did not matter. He took the little one fiercely by the shoulder in a grasp that swung her clear of the protecting arms; and shaking her, he set her down.

"Now you clear out!" he commanded. "If ever I catch you this side the gap, I'll—"

The threat left all possibilities open. The little seeker of love fled from before his face.

At a little distance Puff stood on the defensive, with tail erect and waving. Halleck flung a clod which narrowly missed its mark; then he turned to his mother. She stood in a dejected attitude, the slow tears running down her cheeks.

"There!" he said, gruffly. "I reckon that will settle Willett's little game. If he aims to foist his beautiful plan of benevolence onto my shoulders I guess he'll change his mind! I shall report this pauper at headquarters in the morning, and see if the community has to be pestered any longer. And—Willett needn't apply to me when the church needs money!"

Mrs. Halleck did not answer. Long submission had made revolt impossible. She went silently into the kitchen, and set out the food prepared the day before. Then she and her son ate together—still in silence.

It was always thus, but to-day a new element entered in. Each was subdued by a discovery. The woman had learned that her Davy was coarse and brutal, and the man had learned that his mother was old and in need of love!

Furtively he studied her face and figure line by line. The cheeks had faded, the brown eyes had lost their laughter, the worn hands their dimples.

His glance rested on the little chair in the corner. He remembered a day when she had brought in a manikin molded of butter and set it on the table, pretending to be indifferent, but delighting in his delight. Then, laughing, she had picked out the clove eyes and given them to him, because she knew his fondness for cloves.

"You shall have the top of his head, too!" she had cried, buttering a slice of bread. And then the two had laughed, so foolishly and happily, just because they were all the world to each other!

Now Halleck drew his shirt-sleeve roughly across his face. "It's mortal hot!" he grumbled. "There's storm in the air. I don't believe I'd go to Sunday-school, mother if I were you. You might get caught. You ain't as spry as you was the day you first put them little buff breeches on me, and we went to meetin', and raced the storm, and beat."

She looked up amazed. "I—I remember the breeches," she faltered. "I sat up the night before to make them for you. You looked sweet! You were always a pretty child, Davy. Folks don't dress little boys that way now, but I think they used to look natural and wholesome-like."

"You made the stuff yourself," he said. "I watched you. You've worked pretty hard in your day, I guess. You don't feel any too limber these times, either. If Min had lived—"

He stopped, and she looked blindly into her plate, trembling. When life is almost done, all one asks is that its service be remembered. He was remembering! Out of sorrow and loneliness sprang a sudden joy. The faded cheeks blossomed anew, the sacred fire rekindled in her eyes.

"Don't hurry your dinner." How gently he spoke! "I'll just step out and see that things are snug. We're going to have a regular pour-down! We'll—why, good evenin', Mis' Willett! Come in! The storm is on us!"

Little Mrs. Willett fluttered in, as if blown by the gale. Her face was troubled and anxious.

"Well, the land!" Mrs. Halleck pushed her neighbor into a chair. "Who would have thought of seein' you in the teeth of a storm?"

"I was so uneasy I had to come," said the visitor. "It's that dreadful baby! She isn't at the parsonage, and I supposed she had run away again, but I wasn't sure. If anything were to happen to the little thing—"

Halleck paused in the doorway. "Not at your house? I started her back an hour ago!"

"She didn't come!"

A curious pallor crept over the man's face. He shut his lips together. "I'll look after her," he said. "Stay here with mother, Mrs. Willett."

He went headlong down the path, looking right and left as he ran. For the first time since his wife's death, he found himself praying: "My God help me find the baby!"

At the parsonage the children were scouring the premises unsuccessfully, their father's absence adding to the general dismay. Back Halleck hurried, still praying, "Help me, my God, help me!"

Turning his face to the wind, he started for the cemetery. Perhaps the little outcast had remembered her father's burial. Breathlessly he followed his heart's leading, until he stumbled over an object at his wife's grave—stumbled and fell to his knees. The object got up, holding desperately to a frightened cat that clawed and struggled.

"Don't whip me!" the object pleaded. "I'm Rosy!"

"I won't," said Halleck, taking her and the cat in his arms and soothing them as the storm burst. "Don't be afraid, either of you. I'll be good, Minnie—I'll be like you! Don't cry, Rosy! Put your arm tight around father's neck—that way. Be still, kitty! There—close, it will be over soon. Father will take care of you."

In the clearing shower they came dripping into the immaculate kitchen.

"Hello!" called Halleck, cheerily, depositing his burden on the table. "Here she is, all right, and the cat's done swearing. Not hurt a bit. Haven't you got some of my old duds to put on her, mother? Tell Mr. Willett he needn't bother any more. I've decided to keep the youngster. She's yours, mother; coddle her all you want to. And" he laughed, as he shut the door, "I guess the cat can stay, too!"

Hostess—"You seem to be in deep thought, Tommy."

Tommy—"Yes'm. Mamma told me if you asked me to have some cake I was to say something, an' I've been here so long now I forgot what it was."

Mike—"Are ye much hurted, Pat? Do ye want a docthur?"

Pat—"A docthur, ye fule? After being runned over be a trolley car? Phwat Oi want is a lawyer."

Letter to Wm. C. Devilbiss.

WESTMINSTER

Dear sir: Would you rather have your customers speak of your shoes as wearing well, as not running down at the heel, as turning water, and taking a shine; or wag their heads and say nothing?

We'd rather have ours, at long intervals, say: "We want some more paint, and we want Devoe." We know it isn't in human nature to paint very often; we don't expect them to come very often; don't want 'em to. All we want is to paint what they have to paint, whenever they paint it; the longer the time, the surer they are to come-back. There's buisness enough in the world; there are houses enough to paint; let 'em take their time.

If we were a shoemaker, we'd make shoes to last half a lifetime, and shoe the whole town.

Yours truly

The Family Umbrella.

People all know the family umbrella of tradition, therefore it is a pleasure to read Walter Besant's spicy remarks on this subject. Says he: "The real old family umbrella has gone out. Call that slim attenuated thing a family umbrella? Go away. I remember the genuine family umbrella; it was kept in readiness behind every front door; it was a large, portly, heavy instrument; as an emblem of respectability it was highly esteemed in middle class society; it was serviceable as a tent in rainy weather; it could be used as a weapon of offense and defense on occasion. I have seen a picture of an elderly gentleman keeping off a footpad by means of this lethal umbrella; he made as if he would spear or prod the villian. Why, one prod would alone make a hole of six inches in diameter in that muderous carcass. The nurse used to carry it, with difficulty managing the baby and the umbrella; it went out to tea with the young ladies; the maid who "fetched" them home took the umbrella with her. It succeeded the lantern and the club formerly carried by the 'prentice when he escorted his mistress to the card party after dark. I remember it, I say. There were three brothers who came to the sa school where I was but a tiny lit boy; they lived at some distan and had to pass on their way to sch through a stratum of inferior resp tability. Fvery morning brought these three brothers the delight the excitement of battle with boys belonging to that inferior spectability. To the eldest brot who carried the really import weapon, the umbrella was exac what his battle axe was to the L Heart. So he raised it; so he wield it; so he swung it; so he laid his e mies low to right and to left of hi before him and behind him; while other two, relying on the books tig ly strapped, brought them to b with shrewd knocks and thwacks poundings, on heads and should and ribs. 'Twas a family umbr —green, too, if I remember aright

GEORGE R. GRUMBINE'S.

I guarantee all goods fresh and to be as represented or money refunded. We handle a full line of

FRESH GROCERIES AND CONFECTIONERY.

Best quality at bottom prices. Not necessary to publish prices as the public can be convinced if they give us a call. We have the agency for Marker's Family Flours.

Can't be beat. Give it a trial and be convinced of its quality. Also a large line of Queens, Glass, China, Wood and Tinware.

CANNED GOODS AND DRIED FRUITS of all kinds. I also carry a large line of FRENCH AND AMERICAN CONFECTIONERY, which I sell at bottom prices. RAISINS NUTS, FRUITS, CAKES, Crackers, &c. Tobacco and Cigars. I think I knock them all out on loose Coffees; at least the public says so. Try my 15-cent Coffee. It is taking the place of Moca and Java in many families. I also have added to my stock a full line of feed, such as CORN, OATS, SHORTS, BRAN, Screenings and Cracked Corn. No trouble to show goods. All goods delivered free. Give me a call.
