"Yes, sir, I want to do my colonel's work. I let myself down from the inner wall to-day," the weary, childish voice plodded on. "They thought me a Chinese boy trying to get away. I let them think and I listened. They see many flags floating over our hotel—French flag, Russian flag, German flag, American flag—oh, all flags? I know there are only five people in hotel; they think hundreds. They are digging a way under to find out. You dig from this end toward the wall, you find out. I go to hurry the soldiers. Write me a note, I take it."

Gen. Anderson's jaws sank in amazement. The child's plan seemed almost simple to the old soldier. Was this the way out? "I'm going to take you at your word, Wang," he faltered; and two bright drops ran down his grizzled beard. "If any one can get to our boys you can. Here, take this," he scribbled a few words on a paper, "and tell them to hurry!" Then he handed the paper to her as if he were trusting his most able aide.

"Thank you," murmured Wang, wrapping the note about her finger, and then covering it with a rag. "I think I will get back. I will know your soldiers; they will look like—him."

When the stealthy steps had departed, Gen. Anderson roused himself, and smiled weakly. "I guess I'll go and let Lady Tremaine call me a fool now," he groaned.

Two days passed, three, then a week. Lady Tremaine called the general a fool many times during those soul-trying days; and gentle Mrs. Anderson had not heart enough to defend her great, brave husband. By night the yells of the foe filled the air, and the days were equally terrifying.

Gen. Anderson had set men to work under the hotel, and had found the passage of which Wang had spoken. Several Boxers were killed, the place walled up and guarded, more flags were raised over the poorly defended little hotel, and still Wang came not.

"Had she betrayed us, we had been attacked ere this," pleaded Mrs. Anderson; and that reasonable remark made hope spring again to life. But where was Wang?

The 14th of August came, that ne'er-to-be-forgotten day. Volleys of shot and distant yells filled the air as usual. The occasional silences were really more hard to bear than the cries of hatred. Then, when brave hearts seemed to be bursting with anxiety, a few shouts thrilled the tumult—a mighty, familiar shout in the tongues of many lands, but understood by every heart in the besiged quarters.

"They have come! they have come!" And men and women sobbed in joy. The gates were battered down, and in they poured—those weary, earnest men who had come in time! First came the English, making for their nation's headquarters; then on rushed the Americans, haggard, but jubilant; then the others, mingling promiscuously, and crying out their delight in many tongues.

When once the excitement quieted down, old Lady Tremaine electrified those near by screaming out. "As I live, that big American over there has Wang in his arms!"

"Where? where?" called a dozen voices; but Mrs. Anderson had seen also. In an instant she was beside the soldier, who bore upon his breast, most tenderly, a worn and weary little child.

"This is the boy who reached our lines last night after being detained for days by the Boxers." The big soldier's voice shook. The brutes had rather used the kid up, but he got away; and he had the message round his finger all right. God bless him! We ran nearly all the way after the word was passed along, and each nation fought for the honor of carrying the brave little chap."

"Wang! little Wang! sobbed Mrs. Anderson. "Oh! give her to me. She is only a dear little girl!"

"Little girl!" cried the soldier; and literally dropped his burden in the out-stretched arms. "Little girl? Well, there is hope for China?"

"Will my colonel live?" Wang looked up into the loving eyes gazing in her own. "Will my colonel live, now that help has come?"

"Come and see, you blessed child!" They found him lying happy and expectant; for the news had reached him, borne by Lady Tremaine.

"Wang," he whispered, reaching his thin arms up to her "we're going home, comrade. For the second time you've saved my life, brave little friend."

No Woman.

There is a lawyer with an office in the city who is famous among his friends as a man who never loses his temper or allows his language to stray from the path of propriety.

He was desperately busy the other day, when a female book-canvasser entered his private office, and, as she advanced from the door, announced her mission:

"I should like to show you a very valuable work," she began.

"Madam," said the other, as he rose from his chair, "you must excuse me. I am very sorry, but at present I am engaged."

Evidently the agent had heard something of the kind before, for she did not pause in her progress towards the lawyer's desk.

"Madam," he repeated, "I am engaged at present."

Still the agent came on.

"Madam!" cried the lawyer in desperation, "I am engaged—and if you don't go away you will force me to be what I have never been before—guilty of rudeness to a woman."

"That settled the agent. Probably the very vagueness of the threat helped to set her retreating.

But like a true woman she had the last word—and several of them—just as she vanished through the door.

"I ain't a woman," she said, "I'm a lady."

"It's funny that you should be so tall. Your brother, the artist, is short, isn't he?" He (absently)—"Yes, usually."

People seldom improve when they have no other model but themselves to copy after.

WESTMINSTER

Dear Sirs: Mr. Frank Robinson, Titusville, Pa, bought Devoe with a good deal of feeling against the whole tribe of mixed paints. Our agents there, Messrs. Kernochan & Co, got him to do it. He says:

I am more than pleased with the job. I had one third of the paint left-over; I know of several other jobs, a year old or more, painted with Devoe, that are wearing well.

What a pity we have to all go through the same school, to find out what paint to put on a house! Experience teaches. Isn't there any easier way to learn?

Yours truly
