luted. A courtesy instantly returned by the old colonel in gray,

"Then a voice called across: 'Say, Yank! won't that sperit yon 'uns got over thar play that-a-way again? There's a big tot of us that'ull newer get no nearer ter hom' than he's takin' us ter-night.' And the colonel quickly added: 'Yes, encore! encore! He's a great man, your cornetist, for to-night two opposing armies are swayed and controlled by his voice alone! And once more the applause from the enemy's side began. Silently, swiftly, dark forms slipped out from the shadowy woods and joined us.

"One of our men then called out:—'Once more, old man, for the hull bilin' lot of us! Let the rebs have it, Jack! Cornets are trumps to-night!'

"And then once more it came, that note, so fine, so true, that in all the world there seemed to be but that one note—and silence! More heart-searching, more sad, more tender than before? Oh, yes, it must have been, for shame was clear forgot and young lads choked over suppressed sobs, and the older men stared straight ahead, while slow, scant tears zigzagged down their cheeks and left bitter brine drying on bearded lips. And so as one man they listened, with heart and soul thralled—silent, motionless, until into the honey-sweet, honey-yellow flood of moonlight the last, last note fell and sank. Then unbroken silence lay upon the camp and touched with dignity every living creature resting there."

The sinking moon then saw two mighty, well-matched, fighting beasts, who by command had been kept at bay—held hard in leash, while yet in maddening sight of each other; and they had strained hard and licked their upcurling lips and spread their cruel claws and slavered with hot desire to fly at the vital spot instinct made known to them—and lo, a man of magic came and put upon them both—yes, both—a charm, a wondrous charm, and they had smoothed their bristling backs to satin evenness, covered their gleaming fangs, drawn in their cruel claws, relaxed the mighty muscles strained hard, ready for the crouching spring, and all supine, now stretched their length along the two sides of the stream, purring gently, and giving themselves up completely, utterly, to memories of distant mates, of offspring and of Home! That was what the sinking moon saw.

The rising sun saw the maddened, furious beasts, unleashed at last, fly at each other's throats and tear and rend with grisly joy and shake the forest by their roaring.

"Well," said my story-teller, "that was a great fight, when we got at it—as it ought to have been after such a long waiting for it, and that 'encore' of the rebs got into the newspapers, and poor Jack will never hear the last of it!"

Letter to Josiah D. Crowl

WESTMINSTER

Dear Sir: "It costs as much to put-on poor paint as good"—a common saying and true—it costs much more to put-on poor paint; more gallons.

Poor paint is paint and barytes or paint and sand or paint and lime or paint and chalk or paint and benzine or paint and water; these are the usual cheats; there are others.

It takes more gallons of paint-and-a-cheat than of honest paint; and the cost of the labor of painting is so much a gallon—one gallon costs as much as another, for labor.

This is the way to reckon your costs for this year; but how about next year?

Paint Devoe, and next year costs nothing; year after next the same; the same for several years.

Paint anything else, and your costs recur according to what you paint-with. Some of the mixtures wear one year; some two; some three.

It costs twice, three times, four times, five times, as much to paint with a cheat as to paint with Devoe.

Yours truly

Plaintiff Was Affected.

The case being argued was old Farmer Closegrip versus a railway company for damages sustained in a collision.

The old man's counsel was making a pitiful appeal to the jury.

"Gentlemen of the jury," he said "just gaze upon the true, honest, time-beaten face of my client, and suppose he had been fatally wounded; think of the sad blow that his loving wife and little, innocent children would have to receive; but, thank Heaven, it was not so bad as that.

"But, oh, how he must have suffered during the long days of his illness! How the heart-stricken companion of his life felt when they brought him home, bruised and mangled! Now tell me, shall this poor old man go down to his grave a maimed and helpless creature without some aid from the cause of his affliction?"

During this delivery Closegrip was noticed to be very much agitated, and, rising as the advocate finished, he sobbed:

"My lord, 'scuse my breakin' in, but I must speak."

"Go on," commanded the court.

'I didn't know it were so bad as it air till the gentleman thar sot down; an' ef ye'll let me, I'll—I'll—" here he faltered.

"You'll what?" asked the Judge.

"Just raise them figgers on the railway to a few pounds more—make it a thousand instid o' five hundred, won't ye, my lord?"

"Filthy Lucre."

In New York a week or so ago the police dragged a dirty, foul-smelling old beggar out of a tenement house that was on fire. He had been hurt and had to be taken to a hospital. The probabilities are that he had not had a bath in twenty years. At the hospital the attendants removed his clothing. His legs and a part of his body were "plastered with $1, $2, $5 and $10 bills," amounting to several hundred dollars in all. Imagine those bills going back into circulation and being handled by people who wet their fingers in their mouths as they turned the bills over! And the probabilities are that there are tens of thousands of bills in circulation which, if their history were known, are not less loathsome than the bills taken from the body and legs of the old miser in New York. Isn't the idea enough to disgust anybody with the dirty, pulpy, greasy, foul-smelling old bills?

Torn and dirty bills are not permitted to circulate in Great Britain. If a nation were to be judged by its paper money, we should stand convicted of being a very dirty and ill-smelling people.
