washed walls, and no ornaments of any description in the room—just the plain articles of furniture absolutely essential for use.

"'Lypholate tole me how you're so tony," Mrs. Yingst said, gently rocking back and forth as she gazed with her unvarying placidity of countenance upon the girl before her. "So, I guess we'll seem some plain to you. But us Mennonites don't hold to fash'nable things. We live very plain that way. I tole 'Lypholate, 'We can't accommodate her to satisfaction,' I says when he said now he's fetchin' you to see us once. 'Not to satisfaction,' I says. You know, it goes like this: us, we don't care fur style, only cleanliness."

"Yes."

"Did it mebby make you some warm walkin"? "I'll leave you use my fan."

She took from the table drawer a roll of white tissue paper in which, it presently appeared, a black paper fan was carefully preserved.

"Here, one day last summer, I nearly lost my fan—now think!" Mrs. Yingst's even tones related as she spread open the treasure and handed it to her guest. "I got it for such a prize with a box of soap. I had it now it will be this five years back a'ready till next summer. I was always careful with it. Yes, one day last summer, I nearly lost it yet."

Miss Coxe examined the fan curiously. She could discover nothing about it which explained its being so carefully guarded and treasured. It appeared to be worth about ten cents. Having come with a box of soap, the possibility was precluded of there being any sentiment associated with it. She was mystified. Her long walk had made her warm and tired, and she began to wonder whether she were really awake or whether she was dreaming all these weird, strange impressions of things that seemed to be passing before her.

"I say!" Mrs. Yingst abruptly remarked, in a deep voice that had in it a touch of the tragic. "There's the fly!"

Her eyes were fixed, with a stony stare, upon the high back of Miss Coxe's rocking chair. "Set still till I see once if I can ketch it!"

She rose cautiously, but a look of profound disappointment came into her face, and she sighed as she sat down again.

"Me and Pop's tried now fur a week back to ketch the fly. It must have been the day I cleaned up fur 'Lypholate's comin' home that it somehow got in. We ain't never been able yet to ketch it. Such things spites a body, ain't?"

"But are you sure it's the same fly?" Miss Coxe asked.

"It couldn't be no other, fur only one got in."

"If you don't use this room," Miss Coxe reasoned with her, why do you care?"

"I can't sleep good still when I know there's a fly in the house." Mrs. Yingst sighed, as she resignedly sank back again in her chair. She rocked slowly as she amiably regarded her guest.

"Lypholate ain't spoke just so much to us about you except he said you was so tony. What does your pop follow?"

"Follow?" Miss Coxe asked, puzzled distress in her childish eyes. "What is his bussiness, do you mean?"

"Yes. I mean what does he carry on?"

"He is a retired physician."

"Now think! Like 'Lypholate, ain't?"

"Yes—only, he is retired now. He is an old man. I am the youngest of nine children."

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

Rye and Wheat Hay.

Rye to cure for hay should be cut early, just before it comes into bloom. The stalk is then tender and contains all the juices of the plant. Cut when the dew is off and the weather clear and settled. When the weather is warm and the ground dry the rye will cure in two days, when it should be raked and put up in good-sized cocks, well beaten down with the back of the fork as they are put up. When properly cocked the hay can be left out for some days without risk, as the cocks, when settled, will shed a heavy shower without the inside getting wet. When cured haul in and spread over the barn loft, or between layers of old hay or straw. Every foot layer of it should be sprinkled with salt. When thus handled it will make a sweet nutritious hay, and can be safely fed to workhorses, mules, cows and young stock without risk. It should not be hauled in when damp and heavy and put in a close mow or in a mass, as it will heat in the middle and form a white mold over the straw. Such hay is poisonous to horses when fed in any quantity.

Wheat makes a much better hay than rye, as it has a greater amount of leaf. Wheat for hay should be cut when in full head and handled just the same as rye. Wheat has a softer stalk than rye, and when properly fed there is no waste, as every particle will be eaten. Dairymen who grow rye and wheat for green feed cut both crops when the stalks get tough and hard and cure for winter. Either rye or wheat cut before the grain forms and quickly cured makes a most nutritious hay.

The Old Dinner Bell.

There's music in the lowin' of the cattle on the hills,
An' in the lazy laughter of the waterfalls an' rills;
In the singin' of the bluebird an' the hummin' of the bee,
An' the ole woodpecker peckin' on the holler sugar tree.
There's music in the blossom an' the clear blue of the sky,
In the screamin' of the chicken hawk a-circlin' 'way up high;
But the sweetest songs of June time ain't nowhere near a smell
To the music 'long at noon time of the ole dinner bell.

When plowin' in the distant fields, clean out o' sight o' home,
A-wishin', too, with all your heart that dinner time would come,
You watch the furries stretch away aroun' the lower bend,
An' potter 'round a bit before you start for t'other end,
An' you bend your head and listen to ketch the welcome sound,
An' calc'late it's purt nigh noon by shadders on the ground,
When through the hazy atmosphere, your longin' to dispel,
Comes the fur-off silv'ry music of the ole dinner bell.

When the harvest day is over an' the toiler's work is done,
Over wavin' corn an' clover tinted by the settin' sun,
Low an' sweet the distant music of the ole bell floats along,
Borne upon the evenin' breezes, mingled with the reapers' song;
An' you look acrost the medder, past the ole crick windin' through,
Where the ringer sweet is waitin' with a welcome there for you.
Oh, there ain't no joys of summer that can strike you quite so well,
As the ringin', when you're hungry, of the ole dinner bell.

—Edwin C. Davis.

Hints to Home People.

Too tight collars are apt to cause a permanent swelling of the throat.

Value the friendship of those who stand by you in the storm; swarms of insects will surround you in the sunshine.

Be systematic in your housekeeping. Have each day's work planned the day before, or quite early in the morning.

In case of a fire in a public hall, keep your seat a moment. Your chance of life is greater if free from the crowd.

Most people drink too much and too fast. A small quantity of water sipped slowly will quench thirst as well as a quart taken at a draught.

To cure stammering, when not caused from defective organs, read aloud through the closed teeth two hours each day for two or three months.

It is a mistaken idea to cover a carpet with a drugget in a belief that it will save it. It is the grinding on the floors that wears out carpets, and the protection should come from underneath instead of above.

Patience is always crowned with success. It may not be a splendid victory, but patience never undertakes anything in hand that it does not accomplish.

Let sunshine into the home. It brings health and vigor, radiance and good cheer. It purifies, wards of moisture, mildew, gloom and disease. Its effect is physical, mental and moral.

To wash red table linen put enough powdered borax into tepid soft water to make it feel slippery. Use no soap. Rinse in warm water containing a small quantity of boiled starch. Hang in the shade and iron when nearly dry.
