GRAMPER'S CELEBRATION.

:o:

BY MAY BELLEVILLE BROWN.

"Jest like this selfish generation," Gramper Van Boskirk ejaculated. "Every man jack of 'em gallivatin' up to Waxhaw fer the Fourth, leavin' Pewee Corners empty as a meetin' house on weekdays, 'cept fer you an' me, thet's too old an' lame to go, an' Poorhouse Sally, thet'll hafter stay with the Smith an' Beazlee babies."

Cappen Carter, resting his chin on the head of his cane, nodded vigorous assent.

"Las' year they did as they'd orter," said he; "we'd a lawyer down from Waxhaw to make a speech, an' you an' me set on the platform with the big bugs 'count of bein' ole settlers."

Gramper's chin worked with vigor for a moment, and then he spat out indignantly:

"Thet's the curse of railroads. People's never satisfied to stay at hum. Las' year they hed to drive er else go afoot, an' this year they must git up a big 'xcursion an' go traipsin' off. Indianny was spiled the same way, an' I got up un' come to Kansas twenty years ago, an' now here's the railroad."

First Pewee Corners had been but the schoolhouse, where the farmers came once a month on Sunday to hear the circuit rider preach and where their children came to school during the winter. Then, as the land was more thickly settled, a postoffice was established in a farmhouse at the crossroads, then a country store, to which the goods were hauled in wagons from the nearest railroad, twenty-five miles away, and, last of all, the early spring and summer had brought a railroad directly to their doors, so new as yet that all the travel was by means of construction trains. In the meantime a section house blacksmith shop and two or three other buildings had been added.

This little settlement was but one of several that were strung out on the railroad from Metropolis, the bustling young city on the Great Western railway, to Waxhaw, forty miles to the west.

The approaching holiday was to be a double jollification, to celebrate Independence day and the completion of the new road. The first passenger train was to carry a load of excursionists from Metropolis to Waxhaw. The regular trains would not run for some time, as the bridges on the line were but temporary wooden affairs, and the track was not fully ballasted as yet, but for this occasion the real estate agents had seen that a large crowd was assured, and the only ones discontented with the arrangements were Gramper Van Boskirk and Cappen Carter.

It was the evening of the 3rd that a message from Metropolis came clicking into the little office, causing the operator to turn out with a shout that brought the men from all parts of town.

"Every seat's taken in the excursion train," he announced, "and no more cars can be had. They've ordered the construction train to back down from Waxhaw early in the morning, and every one from here up the road is to go on that. They've two cabooses and will put seats in the flat cars, so we will have plenty of room."

The morning of the Fourth dawned bright and hot. The roofs of the town seemed to curl up shingle by shingle. Corn blades and weeds hung limp. The hills around the horizon swam in glimmering heat waves.

By 8 o'clock the construction train backed across the Pewee creek bridge, just at the edge of town, and up to the platform. It was lavishly decorated with bright bunting and flags, and the hilarious crowd swarmed aboard and took noisy possession. The engine puffed and snorted, the children shouted. There was a rumble, a roar, a succession of whistles, a trail of smoke, and the inhabitants of Pewee corners were gone.

Gramper and Cappen sat on the edge of the platform gazing vindictively down the narrowing rails toward the disappearing train.

"I s'pose they think thet no one ever hed a railroad before," asserted Gramper. "They act es if they owned track, train an' the hull caboodle."

"People ain't like they ust to be," said Cappen plaintively. "They're light minded an' onstable. They don't know who they're celebratin', but it's anything fer a frolic, an' farmin' may go to the dogs."

"An' they're goin' to hev a whole ox an' a Nunited States senator," ruminated Gramper in a tone of regret.

The sun climbed higher, and still the old men sat on the platform mourning their fate. Suddenly Gramper rose stiffly to his feet, pulling Cappen up after him.

"Looky yander!" he exclaimed, pointing excitedly up the road with his cane.

Above the bank of Pewee creek, just where the railroad was flung across, arose a cloud of smoke that every moment increased in volume. They hobbled down the track to the bank and peered over. Where the great timbers of the temporary bridge crossed and recrossed flames licked greedily at the dry tinderlike wood.

Gramper pointed to a dry ledge of earth far below the upper bank.

"Them tramps thet left town this mornin' slep' down thar las' night an' must've built a fire fer breakfast. See how it's crep' from thar all along them beams till now mighty nigh the whole thing's afire!"

"Lan' o' gracious!" ejaculated Cappen, all his spite at the new railroad swallowed up in the face of this calamity. "Ain't thet too scand'lous?"

Just then, from far up the eastern stretch of track, a whistle cleft the air. Gramper suddenly clutched Cappen's arm.

"It's a jedgment on this perverse an' stiff necked gen'ration!" he exclaimed dramatically. "Thet bridge'll be gone by the time the 'xcursion train's in. Pewee Corners is up at Waxhaw with the bobbycue, but Metropolis an' the Nunited States senator an' brass band'll be here, an' it'll be our celebration. Hip, hip, hooray!" And the old man's cane described a triumphant circle in the air.

A telegraph operator on the excursion train finally explained the matter to Waxhaw, where a bored crowd was impatiently waiting for the belated visitors, for a town of 300 people cannot do much entertaining if the speakers of the day and the only brass band are fifteen miles away on the other side of a burned out bridge. The address of welcome was delivered, and the Coyote quartet of Waxhaw sang two or three patriotic songs, according to programme. The picnic dinner was held, but on the whole it was a lonesome affair, and even the barbecue failed to arouse much enthusiasm.

It was well along towards evening when the construction train, with its banners drooping slowly backed up and stopped on the opposite side of Pewee creek. The crowd climbed down the embankment to the footbridges that were hastily improvised from the seats used in the flat cars, the narrow stream was crossed and a dusty, dejected and tired people filed up the bank.

In the grove that stretched away toward the creek from the platform were seated, in groups on the ground and on improvised seats, the excursionists from Metropolis, presenting a marked contrast to the homecomers, so comfortable and good natured did they look.

On the platform was seated a complacent crowd—the resplendent brass band, the United States senator whose name had advertised the Waxhaw celebration, several local celebrities from Metropolis and Cappen Carter, his chin upheld by aggressive dignity, while from the speaker's place held forth Gramper Van Boskirk, chairman of the day, who was winding up the programme by relating in most approved frontier style some of his experiences with the Indians and buffaloes.

As Gramper brought the exercises to a successful close Pewee Corners realized that the impromptu occasion had been a success, and its drooping spirits rose, and when the senator turned back for another handshake with Gramper and Cappen the two old cronies took on new importance in the eyes of the people.

After the train had pulled out to the music of three cheers for the senator three more were given with a will for the heroes who had risen to the occasion. This tribute Gramper acknowledged in a dignified manner, adding with some acerbity:

"Now thet you hev seen what two superannuarated old men can do, I hope you wont be runnin' on wild goose chases over the country, but'll stay to home and celebrate your own town the way you'd orter."

"'Twas a great day—a great day," said Cappen as they hobbled down the road in the dusk.

"Yep, you bet it was," affirmed Gramper. "I give them tramps my oldest boots an' thet orn'ry brown wamus thet I ust to wear at butcherin' times. 'F I'd know'd they wus goin' to hev thet accident under the bridge, I d'no but I'd done more."

IN SELECTING A COLLEGE

THESE ARE THE VITAL POINTS:

1. HEALTHFULNESS.
   Western Maryland College, at Westminster, Md., is 1000 feet above the sea; mild climate; pure air; pure water; perfect drainage.
   Has new and substantial buildings. Steam Heat. Electric Light. Furnishes good food; comfortable rooms. Baths. Gymnasium. Athletic Field.
2. SAFE AND REFINED SURROUNDINGS.
   Founded 37 years ago by Christian men, Western Maryland College has always striven for Christian ends in education.
   Models its discipline after the home, giving its students oversight and protection.
   Believes that character is formed by habits and habits by system, and so provides its students with a schedule that leaves no hour of the day unaccounted for.
   Receives both sexes for the benefit of both, believing this also to be the ideal of the home; but separates the sexes in classwork and limits social intercourse.
3. MODERN METHODS AND EQUIPMENT.
   Western Maryland College came in with the modern educational ideas.
   Led the way in that form of coeducation recently adopted by the University of Chicago—co-equal, but not co-incident education for men and women.
   First College in Maryland to employ a Director of Physical Culture, and to build a Gymnasium.
   Laboratories have grown until a separate building is necessary for them.
   Faculty represents best Universities.
4. LOW RATES.
   Western Maryland College will give you board furnished room, light, heat, laundry and tuition in all College studies for $200 for the full year of 38 weeks.
