1792 James Cheston Incoming Letters

SIDE TWO

that is not the case, but I will not intrude on your time by a detail of my troubles, all of which are trifling in Comparison of the heaviest Affliction that can befall a Woman, Blest with an excellent Husband. such in a very high degree was mine. — I trust God will continue to support and direct me under the important Concerns of so numerous a family which you will now see all devolves on me — my family join me in kind regards to Mrs Cheston with every good wish for a long continuance of uninterrupted happiness to every part of your family from
