President Roosevelt's Inauguration.

The Ceremonies March 4th

From the Baltimore Sunday American.

The inaugural crowds are already beginning to arrive in Washington, and the capital is ready for them. For days workmen have been busy putting up stands from which the great public will witness the pageant as it moves up the Avenue escorting the newly installed President to the White house. The decorators are beginning to show their art, for the fronts of the houses along the line of march are blossoming in colors and bunting. Visitors to Washington have often remarked on one peculiarity of Pennsylvania avenue, the great thoroughfare of the capital, and that is that all of the houses, even from the smallest to the great skyscrapers, have numerous balconies and verandas projecting from their fronts. Visitors at this time of the year no longer wonder at this style of architecture. These balcouies are now covered with signs reading: "Seats on this balcony for sale," or "This balcony for rent on Inauguration Day." The builders and owners of houses when they constructed the buildings all had in prospect the utility of the balconies on fete days and inauguration at the capital.

The stranger coming to Washington for the inauguration will, no doubt, like to know exactly what he or she will be able to see on that day, and also what is to be seen. Therefore, a little idea of the program may not be out of place at this time.

Must Have Card of Admission.

The ceremonies of the inauguration take place at the Capital, and admission is by card only. These ceremonies are under the direction of a congressional committee composed of three members of each branch of Congress, and will be composed this year of Senators Spooner, Aldrich and Bacon, of the Senate, and Representatives Dalzell, Crumpacker and John Sharp Williams, of the House. This committee has charge of the distribution of the tickets to the Senate galleries, the Capitol and to the stand on which the President takes the oath of office. This committee also has the honor of conducting the President-elect to the Capitol, to the grandstand and back to the White House.

The inaugural committee, composed of citizens of the District of Columbia, with Gen. John M. Wilson chairman, has charge of the ceremonies and other festivities outside the Capitol. This committee is divided into various subcommittees, having charge of the parade, the erection of stands, public order and comfort, the inaugural ball and the fireworks at night. The expenses of this committee are paid by voluntary contributions made by citizens of the District of Columbia, all of such subscriptions being paid from the funds raised by the collections for the inaugural ball. For this reason every person attending the ball except the Preaident of the United States and his wife, is obliged to pay $5 for each admission ticket.

Everybody Must Pay Here.

There are no complimentary tickets, not even for the press, and even the committees in charge of the ball are obliged to buy tickets before they can participate. At the last inaugural ball 14,000 tickets were sold, and it is confidently expected that the sale this year will go over 15,000. The receipts for the inaugural balls have not only paid all the expenses incurred by the local committees, but have left a snug balance, which, after all the bills have been paid, is turned over to the poor and to various charities in the District of Columbia.

Congress ends its life by law at 12 o'clock on March 4. There is always a night session of the bodies on March 3, as the rush of business is so great that Congress is obliged to utilize all the time possible for the passage of bills. This night session of Congress is a most interesting affair and the gallaries are always crowded with gay parties of strangers and residents who sit through the night, interested spectators of the scenes on the floors of Senate and House.

A recess is taken usually after the sun is up until 10 o'clock in the morning so as to give the employes a chance to arrange the senate chamber for the ceremonies of the day. The Senate meets at that hour, and the final work of the session is done. This year President Roosevelt will ride alone from the White House to the Capitol, that is as he is the retiring President as well as the President-elect he will occupy a back seat of the carriage by himself. Hitherto the retiring president and the incoming president have ridden together to the Capitol.

The Line from the White House.

This time two members of the Congressional Committee will occupy the front seat of the President's carriage. He will leave the White House at 10.30 o'clock, escorted by his guard of honor, his old regiment of Rough Riders, Troop A, of Cleveland, and a guard of the G. A. R. The parade will move down the avenue to the Capitol, where the President will be met by the remainder of the Congressional Committee and escorted to the President's room on the Senate side. If there are any bills to be signed before Congress adjourns he will employ his time until 12 o'clock in signing them and making them laws.

Meanwhile, the Senate in its chamber and the House of Representatives in its chamber will be closing the work of the Fifty-eighth Congress. Shortly after 11 o'clock everything will be in readiness for adjournment, the usual vote of thanks to the retiring officers having been made and carried. The committe appointed to call upon the President and inform him that Congress has finished its work and is ready to adjourn, unless he has further communications to make, will wait upon the president and by 11.30 o'clock everything will be ready for the final adjournment.

Beginning of the Ceremony.

At this hour the ceremonies in the Senate will begin by the announcement of the arrival of the ambassadors and ministers from foreign countries. They will enter as a body and take the seats assigned to them on the Democratic side of the Senate. Then the chief justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court will be announced, and following the justices will come the House of Representatives, that body having adjourned sine die.

Following the House will come the governors of the states and their staffs, the Admiral of the Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army and the others entitled to the floor of the Senate. A few minutes before 12 o'clock the Vice President-elect Charles W. Fairbanks, escorted by a portion of the congressional committee, will be announced, and the Vice President-elect will take his seat beside Senator Frye, president pro tempore of the Senate. When he is seated the President—the President-elect of the United States—will be announced, and, accompanied by his military and naval aides and his Cabinet, will enter the Senate chamber to take his place in the seats reserved for the party directly in front of the Vice-President's desk.

When the President and his escort is seated, Senator Frye will make his valedictory address, and as he pronounces his last words he will turn to Vice President Fairbanks, hand him the gavel and resign his place as presiding officer of the Senate. Vice President Fairbanks will then take the oath of office and call upon Dr. Edward Everett Hale, the chaplain of the Senate, to open the session with prayer.

The Actual Inauguration.

The prayer finished, Vice President Fairbanks will deliver his greeting to the Senate. Then will follow the reading by Secretary Bennett, of the President's proclamation convening the Senate in extra session. The vice-President will then declare the Senate ready for organization and the new senators will be sworn in. When this is finished the procession will be formed to move to the stand on the east front of the Capitol for the ceremony of the inauguration of President Roosevelt. This imposing parade will move from the Senate chamber through the rotunda to the great stand.

Outside, on the vast plaza facing the Capitol, will be gathered the great American public, waiting to witness the swearing in of the new President and listen to the inaugural address. Extending many squares to the east of the Capitol will be grouped the great mass of soldiers, political organizations and citizens, waiting to fall in line for the great parade. When the guests on the stands have been seated according to order, Chief Justice Fuller will arise, and, advancing toward the President, administer to him the oath of office. When the President has solemnly sworn to fulfill the duties of his high office he will turn to the public and deliver his address to the people.

After he has finished and before the order of march is given, the President and Congress will return to the Senate, the President and his escort going to the president's room, where a lunch will be served, while the Senate returns to its chamber and adjourns until Monday. After a short time spent in refreshment, the President, accompanied by the Vice President, his Cabinet and the Congressional Committee, will leave the Capitol, enter their carriages and head the procession up the Avenue to the White House. It will be something after 2 o'clock before the procession moves, and on reaching the reviewing stand in front of the Executive Mansion, the President and his party will leave their carriages and take their places on the stand and review the parade as it passes.

Parade, Dinner, and Then the Ball.

It is expected that several hours will elapse before the parade ends, and is dismissed. The President and his family will have a short time then to rest, dine and prepare for the inaugural ball. This function takes place in the Pension Building, and the President generally arrives at about 10 o'clock. He is met by the inaugural ball reception committee, and escorted to the presidential reception room, where he meets and greets the inaugural committee and prepares for the grand march. The ball is opened by the grand promenade, led by the President and Mrs. Roosevelt and the members of the Cabinet and their wives. A tour around the hall is made, and this over the President's party retire to the balcony where they watch the merry throng on the floor. The ball, generally, keeps up all night, but inauguration occurring this year on Saturday, it is supposed to close at 12 promptly.

To those who are not willing to spend $5.00 for a glimpse of the ball, other amusements will be provided, the most important being a grand display of fireworks on the white lot south of the White House and near the Washington Monument. This year the committe in charge of this part of the program has arranged for a magnificent pyrotechnic display such as has never been seen in this country before, and, according to the old prophet of the circus sideshow, "it alone will be well worth the price of admission."

An Irishman's Suicide.

"Do you know of the only Irishman who ever committed suicide?" asked W. B. Pollard, of Jersey City, who was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last night, says the Louisville Courier-Journal. "You know it is said that Irishmen never commit suicide, and when the argument was advanced in a crowd of that nationality he was so unstrung that he decided to show his opponents that Irishmen do sometimes commit a rash act. He accordingly disappeared, and the man who employed him started a search. When he got to the barn he looked up toward the rafters and saw his man hanging with a rope around his waist.

"'What are you up to, Pat?' he asked.

"'Oi'm hanging meself, begobs,' the Irishman replied.

Why don't you put it around your neck?'

"'Faith, Oi did, but Oi couldn't braythe,' was the unsmiling reply of the man from the Emerald Isle."

Washington's Birthday.

On February 22nd the Pleasant Valley public school visited the Frizellburg public school when the two schools celebrated Washington's birthday with appropriate readings, recitations and vocal and instrumental music. The visiting school traveled in several large sleds, handsomely decorated with the "Red White and Blue," and the leading sled carried a large flag. At 2.30 o'clock the children were given a recess to become acquainted. The young folks enjoyed themselves during the recess and when the time came to sing "God be with you till we meet again," all regretted that the time for their departure had arrived. The Pleasant Valley School is taught by Mr. Wm. Unger and Mr. C. M. Copenhaver.

Col. John McElroy, of Washington, D. C., delivered a very interesting and instructive lecture Friday night last, before the Grand Army Club of Maryland at its headquarters, in Baltimore, on the closing campaign of the Army of the Potomac in and around Petersburg and Richmond, and up to the closing scene, the surrender of Lee at Appomattox. He said: "In the closing battles around Richmond praise was given the Maryland Brigade, under Gen. Richard N. Bowerman, which went into battle with only 875 muskets but captured two battle flags and 400 prisoners; and the sixth Maryland, which planted the first flags on the ramparts in and around Petersburg, Va."

As March 4, Inauguration Day, falls on Saturday and is, therefore, a half-holiday, the business men of Baltimore City are signing a petition requesting the Governor to make the day a legal holiday, so the people of this state may have an opportunity to witness the inaugural ceremonies. The regiments and the various political and social organizations that will take part in the parade will cause a great number of business men to go over to Washington.

Jay Cooke, whose fame as a financier is world-wide, died Friday last, at the home of his son-in-law, Charles D. Barney, at Ogontz, a suburb of Philadelphia. Mr. Cooke was 83 years of age. He had been complaining of general debility, the result of old age, for several years. His condition was not considered serious, however, and his death came rather suddenly.

John Dorcas, a retired farmer and prominent resident of Woodsboro, Frederick county, died Wednesday of pneumonia. He leaves a widow, three sons (Edward T., Port Deposit, Md.; G. Milton, Rockville, Md., and Wm. H. at home) and three daughters (Mrs. H. H. Whitmer, Hanover, Pa.; Misses Annie and Elsie, at home).

The joint council of the Woodsboro Lutheran charge, of Frederick county, has voted to extend a call to Rev. Reese St. Clair Poffinberger, of Washington county, Md., to become pastor of the charge. Mr. Poffinberger will graduate in June from the Lutheran Theological Seminary at Gettysburg, Pa.

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very trouble some cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,
