PRIDE AND WORTH.

A weed and a rose and a violet grew
 In a garden side be side;
As the rose looked down on the lowlier two
 She blushed in her queenly pride.

And once as red lips drank the dew
 The rose in a whisper said:
"If I were as worthless as each of you
 I'd rather that I were dead."

But the weed that night made a cooling cup
 For the life of a fevered child,
And one who had mourned for years looked up
 And, kissing the violet, smiled!

Methodist Protestant Conference.

The seventy-seventh session of the Maryland Annual Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church, which convenes in the Methodist Protestant Church at Salisbury, Md., on April 5, promises to be one of the most interesting that has been held for a number of years. There seems to be a greater desire on the part of the ministry, as well as the laymen, to push the general interests of the church to the front, and raise the sums of money which have been assessed to the charges for the benevolent purposes of the church at large.

The session will be presided over by Rev. Dr. Frank T. Little, who is president of the Conference. The presumption is that Dr. Little will be re-elected for the fourth year.

Two of the older ministers of the Conference have died during the year. These were Rev. A. D. Dick, who was received into the Conference in 1852, and Rev. Charles H. Littleton, who was received in 1854. The widows of these two deceased ministers also died during the year.

The Conference at the present time has a ministerial membership of 140 and a lay membership of 130. The statistics show a membership of 24,121 and a probationary membership of 1,161, making a total membership of 25,282.

There are 289 churches in the Conference district, which includes Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and parts of New Jersey and Virginia. There are 104 parsonages. The value of the church property is $1,193,700, and the value of the parsonage property is $185,710. The number of Sunday schools is 271, with 25,620 scholars on the rolls and 3,457 officers and teachers. There are 4,140 members of the Christian Endeavor Societies and 2,000 junior members.

According to the last statistics, there was raised for the general interests of the church $24,366 and for local interests $210,320. The superannuated fund of the Conference, which is invested, amounts to something over $80,000, the interest from which, together with the annual collections from the churches, is applied to the support of the superannuated ministers of the Conference, their widows and orphans.

FOLLOWING A BEE LINE.

Old John Hannah, now in his seventy-fifth year, is still the best bee hunter on Little Cataloochee, Haywood county, where he has lived sixty-four years. He is the father of twelve children, one of whom is dead; his hair and long beard are white as snow, but his tall muscular figure is as erect as that of an Indian chieftain. He is really a kindly looking man with a keen black eye, which is still undimmed.

John Hannah takes no boxes and platform with him when he starts on a bee hunt, says a writer in the Raleigh Post. His equipment consists solely of a tin cup or tin plate with a little bee bread and honey in it. That is all except his keen eyes. John Hannah starts out for the meadows and the fields around about wild Mount Sterling, and it is a rare thing for him to return before he has located a bee tree. He knows his business.

In the spring the bees feed on the bloom of the lin and the sourwood, and the honey produced from these blooms is the whitest in comb and the most delicate flavored of all that is made by these dusty fellows with legs powdered with gold. It is not an easy matter to "line" bees from these trees, but John Hannah does it with unfailing skill. But at this time of the year, early spring, John and the other bee hunters are almost too busy putting in their crops to be able to spare the time for this sport.

It is after the crops have been laid by and the glorious summer weather is everywhere that these mountain people find time to follow the swift winged insect and the enthusiasm and ardor they all feel and exhibit is really wonderful to observe. They are as eager hearted about it as a deer hunter is when hunting deer.

Just to the left of Mount Sterling gap is a strawberry field, in which wild flowers bloom in profusion in August. From it one may look west and northward, that is toward Big Creek and Pigeon River, and behold nothing but the primeval wilderness as far as the eye can reach. There is literally not a field or clearing in sight. The entire country looks just as it looked when the Cherokees were the sole denizens of this section of the State. It was here that I watched John Hannah hunt bees. He did not clap a box down on a clover bloom or any other wild flower. He simply set his tin plate down among the flowers and looked on. He did not have long to wait, for presently a bee lit on the edge of the plate and began to fill itself with the sweets spread before it.

Long before it had obtained its load, it was joined by another, and by yet another and another, till seven or eight bees were were sipping the honey on the platter. In a few noments one of the bees flew. John was all attention in an instant. This bee did not rise and circle around till it had got its bearings; it simply flew slanting away in a a fixed direction, and kept that direction till it was out of sight. Then another followed, and then another. Then a new bee lit on the plate and began to sip, and soon after another bee flew off, taking the same course as the first bee. Then at short intervals new bees came in and other bees flew away.

All went in the same direction. This seemed to satisfy John, for he took up the tinplate and motioning me to follow, passed down the sloping mountain side 300 yards or more, and set down his plate again, still bearing on it several bees which had alighted there when it was in its first position, and which were too absorbed in gathering its sweets to notice that they were being borne away. In a short time other bees lit on the plate, and soon another bee flew off. John watched its flight with eager eyes. This was repeated by several other bees and by John till five or six bees had taken flight. Then John turned to me and said: "See that dead tree top off yonder, just this side of the balsam?"

I told him I saw it plainly.

"That's the bee tree," he returned and taking up the plate we started together for the tree indicated. It was not more than a quarter of a mile from where we were and we soon stood at its base. Looking up I saw several small black insects circling around and about the trunk two-thirds of the way up; then I heard a faint humming sound.

"Let's cut it down," I cried enthusiastically.

"What you going to cut it with?" asked John.

"But if we leave it here we shall never find it again," I protested.

"Oh, yes," returned John. "I could find that tree in the dark."

And sure enough, two weeks later John and I returned with axes, buckets and some old rags, cut the tree down, smoked the bees out and took about fifty pounds of honey home with us.

"How was it done? It is as simple as A, B, C, when you know how. It is simply a primitive method of range finding. John has noted every tree directly in the course followed by the first set of bees. Then he had marked the trees in the course followed by the second set of bees, and where those two courses intersected, there was the bee tree.

"What do you do when bees fly in different directions?" I asked John.

"I note the direction each bee takes and follow the course taken by the greatest number, as the chances are that there are more bees from the nearest tree than from those further off. I follow up the first and then come back and study out the other course the same way."

"When will you be too old to hunt bees?" I asked.

"When I'm dead," answered John and I believe him.

The Month to Marry.

From old books we get the following saying which may interest you just now while the year is young and you are thinking seriously concerning your life—past, present and future.

A January bride will be a prudent housekeeper and very good tempered.

A February bride will be a humane and affectionate wife, and tender mother.

A March bride will be a frivolous chatterbox, somewhat given to quarreling.

An April bride will be inconsistent, not very intelligent, but fairly good looking.

A May bride will be handsome, amiable and likely to be happy.

A June bride will be impetuous and generous.

A July bride will be handsome and smart, and a trifle quick tempered.

An August bride will be amiable and practical.

A September bride will be discreet, affable and much liked.

An October bride will be pretty, coquetish, loving, but jealous.

A November bride will be liberal, kind, but of a wild disposition.

A December bride will be well proportioned, fond of novelty, entertaining, but not extravagant.

Fable.

This is the Estimator. What is He Doing? He is Trying to Make Figures. Figures do not Lie. But the Estimator Makes Them.

Who is This? This is the Proprietor. What is he Doing? He is Scratching his Head. Why does he Scratch his Head? Because he can't make Figures like the Estimator.

Do you see the Boy? Yes; I see the Boy. What is the Boy Doing? Why is he Hiding from the Boss? He is Learning to be a Printer. Will he Learn to be a Printer? Perhaps—in a Thousand years.—Inland Printer.

"Ain't got no use for it," snapped the busy merchant.

"Oh, yes, you have," said the agent. "Look at the title, 'The Art of Conversation and Correct Speech!'"

"They say the President is very friendly toward Senator Crane."

"So I've heard."

"I 'spose he'd like him better if his name had been Stork."

Some Little Questions.

Why don't you fasten up that gap in a good substantial way?

Why don't you put a good latch on your stable door, instead of using a pen, or a fence rail?

Why don't you fix that harness you broke the other day and tied up with a piece of binding twine?

Why don't you get out and clean up those old fence rows, instead of waiting until corn planting or harvest time?

Why don't you haul the wood up near the kitchen door, and not force the good wife to go to the woods for fuel for every meal?

Why don't you get wood enough in, and water enough up, before breakfast, to last the patient, already overworked housekeeper all day?

Do you shelter your stock and implements? Do you regularly drain out the water pools and troughs? Have you plank, brick, or stone walks, to and from the house?

"No, Willie, you mustn't go down to play with Tommy," said a fond mamma, to her seven-year-old son. "He has the whooping cough and I'm afraid you'll take it."

"Oh, no, I won't, mamma," replied Willie. "If you'll let me go I promise you faithfully I won't take anything belonging to Tommy."

Wife—According to this paper, hot water will prevent wrinkles.

Husband—So? Then how do you account for the numerous wrinkles I have?

Wife—How do I account for them?

Husband—Yes; you keep me in hot water nearly all the time, you know.

Grocer (to small customer)—"Johnny would you like to have an apple?"

Johnny—"No, sir; I'm afraid to eat em."

Grocer—"Why?"

Johnny—"'Cause my grandfather died of apple-plexy."

Suburbanite—"You've got a new baby at your house, I hear?"

Townite—"Gracious, can you hear it away out there in the suburbs?"

An agnostic is one who does not know whether he knows or not.
