seen her. When the wires lay flat she led the horses over them, mounted and rode on before the wind.

A mile of straight level, then came the broken ground where the washouts lay. She stopped, called Mack to her, and held something down for him to smell—a folded white paper, covered with penciled writing.

'Seek him, Mack.'

Mack understood. It was the tall fellow who never kicked a dog, but always had time for a pleasant greeting, and who followed sheep around the country. It was perfectly simple. To find him, one had only to find the sheep—and did not the odor of many sheep cry aloud to the very heavens? Seek him? It was a joke at which he could have laughed. Down this washout, for instance, the air was rank of sheep. A little further, now——

Dot rode up to the shivering, gray patch under the bank, where two weary dogs stood guard, and a wearier man stumbled back and forth along a pitiful, black-beaten trail.

He eyed her stupidly, still staggering along the path he had made.

'Hello!' he said, as one half wakened from sleep. 'Are yuh—looking—f'r some one?'

'I'm looking for you, Joe.' Dot choked and swallowed hard.

Joe lurched nearer, studying her figure wonderfully.

'Dotty—is it—you? I'm—about all in, my girl.'

'No, you ain't, either,' cried Dot, fiercely, tearing open her coat. 'A man like you—to keep your feet and your wits all night—you ain't going to give up now. I never slept for thinking of you in the storm. Here, drink this, and then climb onto Mike's horse. Here, it will steady you.'

Joe lifted a wooden hand and dropped it again, with the shadow of a smile.

'Can't, Dot. My hands—they're snowed under, yuh see.'

Dot tore at the cork with her teeth.

'Here, Joe—lean against me—that way. I'll hold the bottle. Drink it all—every drop. There's brandy in it—I stole some of Mike's.'

When Joe spoke again his voice was firmer. The light came into his eyes.

'You're the proper stuff, little girl. A little more and I'd been all in. I can't climb into that saddle—I'm limber as a froze jack rabbit—that's what.'

So Dot got down and helped him, while the horse, which was used to having Mike boosted into the saddle in the gray of a morning, waited decorously till they were ready.

'I'll send Mike after some one for the sheep. A man's life comes first Your's does, Joe. Mother'll be home today, and she's as good as forty doctors. You'll stop with us till you're well.'

Joe steadied himself in the saddle, though he could not hold the reins with his frozen fingers.

'Come, Lad,' he said, huskily. 'Come, Bonnie, my girl. Yuh mind them biscuits yuh had? You'll get some more just like 'em, maybe. We're goin't' heaven, sure. We're going—home—with Dottie.'

POULTRY POINTS.

Disinfectants are cheaper than disease.

Keep pure, fresh water always within reach.

Fowls in confinement, to do well, need a variety of food.

When chickens have bred disease, look out for large lice.

Crowding induces disease and lowers the vitality of fowls.

Diseases can be readily transmitted from parents to offspring.

To avoid disease, it is better to breed away from it.

In selecting a location for a poultry yard, choose a light, sandy soil.

Manure piles are good for the production of gapes in chickens.

The falling off of the rooster's comb shows him to be in bad health.

Fowls having a free range will find their own feather-making food.

Do not condemn a breed simply because a few fowls do not come up to your expectations.

Meal should be mixed dry and crumbly, since it causes illness when fed wet.

The guinea-fowl is a great forager and destroys many insects that other fowls will not touch.

The Hen That Works.

The hen is naturally industrious, and she should not be compelled to remain idle by being cooped up in a dark, filthy house, with leaky roof and bare floor. She should be encouraged to work, and a place should be provided for her. If it is impossible to have a separate scratching shed, arrange dropping boards under the roosts and cover the floor with straw and throw grain in this. Any kind of small grain is good—the best being oats, millet and barley. Corn is an excellent winter food, but should be given only late in the afternoon. During the severe weather it is better if warmed or partially browned in the stove. Drinking water should also be slightly warmed—just enough to take off the chill. The hen that works will lay, and just as sure as day follows night the one that does not work will not lay.

OLD TIME DROVERS.

Early in the nineteenth century a yearly drive over the Pennsylvania mountains of all the live stock the farmers had for sale was instituted. It was no light matter to arrange an itinerary over the mountains for the different droves, whether of steers, hogs or turkeys, which must arrive unimpaired at the end of their journey of 400 miles. In "Harm Jan Huidekoper" the story of the animal drive is given;

Before the setting out of a drove of cattle came the branding; this accomplished, off they went on their long tramp. The first few miles were the worst for the men and dogs, for so long as the steers were upon familiar ground they would make bold dashes for liberty, but once away from their own haunts forever, they became timid and docile—were road-broken, as the phrase was—and would jog on quietly at command.

Often the cattle must simply be kept alive by foraging for themselves upon the wayside trees and herbs. That was when they were among the mountains or in the solitary wilderness.

When partially settled regions were reached, the help of the country people would be sought, and, word having been sent in advance, at certain farms along the route good pasturage would be reserved. In large fenced-in fields of growing grass, the tired beasts could be corralled and allowed to feed and rest, while the men found entertainment under the farmer's [illegible] three or four cents a head for the cattle was the common rate at these stopping places. It enabled the farmer to turn his grass into money without the labor of mowing or pitching.

Were the drove made up of sheep, the farmer's children frequently became the possessors of weakling lambs and childish hangers-on would often follow the drove for miles in the hope of obtaining one of these laggards.

As for the turkeys, as many as 1500 of these would sometimes be collected for a single drive. They needed great care and patience. During the first days they always grew very footsore, and must proceed by short and easy stages until their delicate birds' feet had been hardened by use. Moreover shortly before sunset, no matter where they might be, the whole flock would begin to roost.

The droves of swine were the greatest trouble, each on its own hoggish hook, for the hog follows no leader, and on such personally conducted parties is distinguished chiefly by continuous outbreaks of the most original sin. Nevertheless, after due tribulation all these droves were somehow convoyed to their destination.

A Quick Delivery Letter.

It is a curious fact that a century and a half ago a letter travelled much faster than ever it has done since. It was in 1873 that Lord March made a heavy wager that he would cause a letter to be conveyed 100 miles within an hour. His lordship engaged a score of cricketers, all expert throwers and catchers, had the missive inclosed in a ball, and, arranging his men at intervals in a circle, got them to throw the balls as swiftly as possible from one to another. At the end of the hour it was found that the letter had traveled almost exactly 120 miles.—Era Magazine.

Physiognomy.

Dr. Barnado, the great London child saver, was once discussing crime and criminals with a Scotland Yard expert and expressed his disbelief in the theories of heredity and criminal physiognomy. He produced two photographs of two well known men and shown the faces only to the expert. "One," he said, is that of a once notorious criminal, and the other is that of a notable good man. Tell me which is which." Withhont hesitation the expert designated one of the photographs as that of the notorious criminal. Dr. Bernardo was triumphant. The expert criminologist had chosen the photograph of an archbishop of Canterbury.

VANISHING GAME BIRDS.

The general prospects this season for good prairie chicken shooting—one of the keenly popular upland sports with dog and gun—seem in the main to be unfavorable. Undoubtedly there are small acres here and there, mere nooks in comparison to the whole vast prairie hibitat of the pinnated grouse, which contain birds a plenty and which will afford ample sport for the favored few who have access to them, but for the hundreds of chicken shooters, who take their chances without preliminary investigation, much failure and disappointment are in store.

The reports from many of the prairie districts where the pinnated grouse in times past were abundant, or at least plentiful enough to afford good sport, indicate an unusual scarcity.

Undoubtedly the destruction of the pinnated grouse is greater than its production. The decrease in its numbers seems to be steadily progressive with the passing years. The area of the habitat of species also is gradually diminishing, though this is not manifested by the entire and sudden extermination of the chickens in a certain section, nor their sudden abandonment of it.

The change from abundance to dearth comes about gradually. Some sections in former years which afforded sport for weeks in later years afford sport for days only. From abundance the supply becomes meager. Oftentimes the changes from plenty to poverty, the lamentable results of extermination or abandoned habitat, are not noticed by the sportsman till he is confronted wiih the fact when diligent seeking for sport afield with dogs and gun ends in failure.

The enormous decrease in the numbers and the decreasing habitat of the prairie chicken are not realized by the younger sportsmen of the present time. Nor do the older sportsmen realize it by any comparisons of more recent years. A comparison of present conditions concerning chicken shooting with those which obtained fifteen or twenty years ago will bring into conspicuous relief the progressive decrease, which has resulted in the scarcity of the present.

Twenty years sgo the habitat of the prairie chicken, beginning in Western Louisiana and Texas, extending through the paraire region of the Middle South and West, far up into British America, and plentifully stocked with chickens, was far in excess of the prairie chicken habitat of the present. Plentiful as were the birds then, they occupied a lessened habitat and were far less in number than they were when Audubon, on a visit to Kentucky, wrote of them as being so over-plentiful there and destructive to crops that they were little [illegible] Stream.

CAVE OF THE WINDS.

The great wind cave has the form of an eight story house, each story, or stratum, containing a distinct formation of its own and each containing chambers of a size and magnificence of decoration such as have never been found in any subterranean cavern of the world.

It is a dream, a nightmare, a vision, carved in solid stone under the green hills of Dakota, stone as white as the milk the hired man used to give us to drink in the dawn of a happy June morning, stone as red as the heart of the first bloodroot that you dug in the spring when the world was all spring to you and stone that is blue with a blue that all the painters who have ever painted Venice have tried to get for generations and have failed.

Frozen fountains are there, white with the leaping foam of untold ages, sculptured cats and horses and great monsters to be dreamed about of nights and feared in dark corners in the daytime, organs built by the hands of giant gnomes for a Titan to play wild hymns of praise upon, a kitchen for the cooking of weird dishes never thought of up here in the sunshine, all manner and all kinds of rooms, ninety miles of them, down there under the hoofs of the gallant little range horses who pound the grass into hay the year round, up there in South Dakota.

Conquests of Silence.

Washington never made a speech in the zenith of his fame. He once attempted it, failed and gave it up, confused and abashed. In framing the constitution of the United States the labor was almost wholly performed in coumittee of the whole, of which George Washington was day after day chairman, and he made but two speeches during the convention, of a very few words each. The convention, however, acknowledged the master spirit, and historians affirm that had it not been for his personal popularity and the thirty words of his speech, pronouncing it the best that could be united upon, the constitution would have been rejected by the people.

Thomas Jefferson never made a speech. He couldn't do it.

Napoleon, whose executive ability is almost without a parallel, said that his difficulty was in finding men of deeds rather than words. When asked how he maintained his influence over his superiors in age and experience when commander in chief of an army in italy he said, "by reserve." The greatness of a man is not measured by the length of his speeches and their number.

ICE FOR HEATING.

The use of ice for heating purposes is one of the oddities of our modern civilization. Often it happens that a train carrying fruit from the south to the northern market encounters a cold spell while en route. If the temperature goes below a certain point the perishable merchandise will be ruined. But such a misfortune may be prevented by covering the fruit car with a coat of ice, a thing easily accomplished by turning a hose upon it and allowing the water to freeze until the whole vehicle is enveloped in a glassy and glittering blanket.

It may, indeed, be appropriately called a blanket, inasmuch as it prevents the radiation of heat from the interior of the car. The ice being a good nonconductor the warmth is retained and the fruit, or possibly it may be vegetables, goes on its way unspoiled even by zero weather.

Cars used for transporting oranges and other fruit from California to the east are often provided nowadays with large cylindrical "ice stoves," as they might be called, at each end, which, while useful in summer time for refrigeration, are filled with ice during a cold spell in winter. When the temperature outside is at zero or below, the ice, at 32 degrees F., is comparatively warm, and thus the "stoves" described act as heaters.

Liquid Litigation.

New York Herald.

In Perak lawyers find no business, for a modified form of trial by ordeal decides all disputes. In place of the legal practitioner the pleader is a native boy who is assigned to one or the other of the sides and is given a bamboo tube in which is sealed the pleading of the person or party whom he represents.

When all is ready two stakes are driven into the bed of a stream, and by aid of a bamboo pole the heads of the two boys are submerged at the same time.

By grasping the stakes they are enabled to remain under water for quite awhile after their natural inclination would bring them to the surface, but at last one of them gives in and, releasing his hold of the stake, comes to the air.

He is immediately seized, and the tube he holds is cast aside. The other lad is led ashore, his tube opened, and the document contained therein stands as the decision in the case.

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.
MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:
Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am, Truly yours,
