WESTMINSTER, - MARYLAND.

W. L. W. Seabrook, - Editor.

Entered at the Postoffice at Westminster, Md., as Second-class matter.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 8, 1905.

Congress met on Monday and re-elected Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, (Uncle Joe) of the Eighteenth District of Illinois, Speaker. The Democrats voted for Hon. John S. Williams, of Mississippi, who was their leader in the Fifty-eighth Congress and has been chosen again for that position in the Fifty-ninth. Mr. Williams will have abundant opportunity to demonstrate his qualities as a leader of the minority at the present session, as many difficult and important questions will require consideration and action. He has the reputation of a strong speaker and brilliant orator, but those who heard him address a Democratic meeting in this city, a year or two ago, must have been disappointed in their expectations.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The annual message of President Roosevelt, which was read in both Houses of Congress on Tuesday, was probably a record breaker in point of length, having covered nearly three closely printed pages, in small type, of the Baltimore daily newspapers. An intelligent abstract of the paper would fill many columns of the SENTINEL.

It is a characteristic document. The President says what he thinks in his straight-forward, forcible and strenuous way and recommends legislation on such subjects as he thinks requires it. He advises national legislation for the control of railroad rates and also for the supervision of insurance companies. He strongly urges the admission of Philippine products to the United States free of tariff duties, and, in some cases, suggests constitutional amendments authorizing legislation now inhibited by the national organic law. Long as is the message it is a very readable production and is bristling with epigrams.

The Meriwether-Branch Case.

The trial of Midshipman Meriwether at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, by court-martial, for causing the death of Midshipman Branch in a game of fisticuffs, was concluded last week, but the findings of the court, at this writing, have not been made public, having been submitted to the Judge Advocate General at Washington, for review, after which they will be taken up and considered by Secretary Bonaparte, who will have the final ruling in the case.

Much evidence was educed in the progress of the court-martial proceedings to mitigate the degree of crime committed by the accused, against whom one of the charges was that of manslaughter. It is said that the findings exonerate him of this offence There is no doubt, of course, that the death of either of the combatants was foreign to their purpose, but they were engaged in an unlawful proceeding, both naval and civil, and it is difficult to see how the survivor can be guiltless of technical involuntary homicide. Probably nobody—not even the parents of the dead midshipman—desires the infliction of punishment commensurate with the ordinary crime of manslaughter. The sense of having taken human life will be a sufficient punitive burden upon the unfortunate survivor of the fight. He himself, in his testimony, declared that Branch's fate was happier than his own.

But it must be conceded that it would be a miscarriage of justice if he were entirely exonerated from the consequences of his violation of the rules set for the government of the Naval Academy. He should not be exonerated because, as it was made to appear in his trial, such violations of the rules were winked at and overlooked by the authorities in charge of that institution. That fact greatly mitigates the extent of his culpability, but cannot relieve him of the consequences of his action.

Plain people, however, will be asking why these authorities should not come in for a reprimand from the department, with notice that hereafter they will be held to a strict accountability for permitting violations of the laws governing the academy. For these matters are regulated by law.

The idea of the people who have charge of the academy seems to be that the practice of fisticuffs, and the baiting of lower classmen, by those more advanced, is a means of developing manliness in the midshipmen. This certainly is a most mistaken notion. The United States is supposed to be educating gentlemen and naval officers at the academy, not sluggers and prize-fighters. From the testimony educed on this trial, it appears very much as if the Naval Academy authorities have a very faint conception of what constitutes a gentleman. It certainly does not consist in browbeating and annoying those in lower or inferior stations, as these naval men seem to imagine. The true gentleman demands respect from his superiors and accords it to his inferiors. If a different view obtains with those who are in charge of the Naval Academy, Secretary Bonaparte should take steps to teach them a salutary lesson in manners which they will not soon forget.

ADDITIONAL LOCALS.

Without a License.

The grand jury of this county, for the present term of court, found indictments against the Singer Manufacturing Company, in two cases, for selling goods without a license. The company pleaded guilty and the court imposed a fine of fiftydollars and costs, in each case. The proceeding was a very important one, as far as the revenues of the State are concerned. The accused company had been doing business in this county, through its agents, for probably the third of a century, without any question as to its right to do so without paying a license tax. State's Attorney Steele caused an investigation of the matter by the grand jury, which resulted in the indictments referred to. It is understood that a license is required for the selling of the sewing machine supplies handled by the company and also for peddling its machines. As it is probable that business of this sort is being conducted all over the State, either by the Singer or other companies, it can be seen that the license tax will add materially to the State's revenues. This is, we understand, the first instance in which the law on the subject has been enforced. The Standard Oil Company has also been indicted for an alleged violation of the law in the same manner and the case willprobably be tried to-morrow.

Mr. Johnson F. Benson died in Washington, D. C., on the 3rd inst., and his remains were brought to Hampstead on Wednesday and taken to Mt. Carmel, Baltimore county, for interment. He was a son of Mr. B. Frank Benson, of that county, and was 38 years old.

For the Sentinel.

The New Morgan's Chapel Church.

Having vainly searched last week's SENTINEL, for something about the new church at Morgan's Chapel, and its dedication, we send an account of it ourselves, knowing it will interest many readers.

On dedication day, Nov. 26th, Rev. B. F. Clarkson had charge of the services, assisted by Revs. A. F. Campbell, Harris, Cecil and Jarboe. Rev. Campbell preached at 10.30 A. M. and Rev. Clarkson at 7.30 P. M., to very large audiences. The total cost of the building was $2,800.00 and only a small amount remains to be paid.

The lower part of the church is a basement, very comfortably and neatly fitted up for a Sunday School room and for entertainments. It also contains the heating apparatus for the entire building. The pews in the main room are considered by all who have had an opportunity to use them, to be the most comfortable as well as the most beautiful in any church for miles around.

A handsome bible and hymn books, an organ of beautiful tone and design, and handsome pulpit furniture will for years to come remind the congregation of the tender thoughtfulness and kind generosity of their donor, Mr. George W. Mullinix, who also gave $500, being the largest contributor. Mrs. S. E. Sauble presented a bell, which speaks for itself. Last but not least the chandaliers, presented by Mr. Howard Gosnell in memory of his deceased sister and brother, are indeed things of beauty and a joy all the time.

It is needless to state that there were some in the neighborhood who would not give a cent, an hour's work or a kind wish. The majority, however, were willing to help in any way they could. Some who are large farmers, taking the scarcity of help in consideration, were so tireless in their efforts, and spent so much time working at the church, that we deem them worthy of especial mention. They are: Messrs. Frank Gosnell, S. P. Lewis, F. J. Leatherwood, C. A. Mullinix and Wm. Reynolds.

Money Saved by Telephone—A Great Saving of Time to the Progressive Farmer.

From the Salisbury Advertiser, Salisbury, Md.

Perhaps the most serious problem which confronts the American farmer to-day is the saving of time, the crowding of more than ever into a given period. It is with a view of solving this problem that every up-to-date farmer is continually buying the latest improved farm implements and labor-saving devices for tilling the soil.

As a means of saving time, we ask you, if you are a farmer, if you could employ any quicker or cheaper method than to install a telephone in your farm house? Have you ever stopped to consider how much time you could save by the use of the telephone? Do you know that you could transact your business with your shipping agent, your bank, your lawyer, and keep in touch with the latest market quotations on farm products generally if you had a telephone in your house?

Figure it out for yourself. Ordinarily a trip to your shipping point would take you at least a half a day. If the market was poor when you got there and you did not make the shipment you would lose a half day's time. A telephone would have done the job in a few seconds and saved you an unnecessary trip.

The hurry call for the doctor or veterinary, the purchase and repair of farm implements, the employment of help, the social chat with your neighbors and the protection to your wife and family while you are away from home should be sufficient reason to impress every farmer with the need of a telephone. The telephone in the farm house offers the most perfect combination of life, fire, accident and health insurance, and a telephone in your farm house is a better protection against danger from lightning then the best lightning rod manufactured.
