SICK.

—:o:—

When mother's sick, the house is all
So strangely hushed in room and hall!
But mother never will admit
She's suffering a single bit!
She won't let people do a thing—
There's nothing any one can bring—
She just lies there, and tries to fix
Herself by cunning little tricks!
And as for doctor—why, the word
She scouts as being most absurd,
And when he comes he has to guess
At symptoms that she won't confess;
And then he's apt to frown and say:
"You should have had me right away,
"I'll come again this evening"—for
It's bed, you see, a week or more!

When father's sick—I tell you now
You ought to hear the dreadful row!
The talk of "dying," and the groans!
The orders in convulsive tones!
The hasty runnings to and fro;
To rearrange the pillow—so;
To fix hot water bag and shade;
For mustard plaster, lemonade!
Appeals to get the doctor, quick—
And "Can't you see I'm awful sick!"
And then the doctor sits and hears
While father grunts his pains and fears,
He leaves some drops, and tells us:
"Hum!
Unless I'm needed I sha'nt come
Again. I think he'll do all right,"
And father's up, perhaps, by night!

BY CLINTON DANGERFIELD.

Jerry Brannon studied her delicate profile eagerly, through the medium of one of the dingy, narrow, mirror panels set in the car. Hitherto he had always considered these panels as a weak trucking to feminine vanity. He now perceived their intrinsic value and blessed the man who had conceived the idea.

It hurt him seriously to think that she would pass out of his life when they reached Louisville. He raged against the conventionalities which set a barrier between himself and the unknown.

A grey-haired, stately old gentleman, whom he correctly supposed to be her father, sat beside her, and was just strewing her lap with magazines bought from the train boy.

'No earthly chance for an introduction,' groaned Bannon to himself. 'Not a soul here who could possibly help me.'

His eyes involuntarily turned with disgust from the other occupants of the little car.

It was a mixed train, running from far beyond Anchorage, and it carried half a dozen owners of small tobacco farms, on the way to attend the Louisville auction, and some equally bucolic females, several of whom were burdened with restless, sticky children.

The fair unknown shone the more by contrast. Brannon involuntarily compared her exquisite grooming with the frowsy condition of a middle-aged and solitary female who sat just across the aisle from him.

There was a huge basket on the seat beside her. Over its top was tied a white cloth, which occasionally bulged up fiercely in bumpy spots, while smothered sounds of inarticulate wrath issued from within.

The owner of the basket detected Brannon's glance. To his horror she nodded, smiled, arose, and, coming across, dumped herself down beside him, smoothing back her thin hair with a cotton gloved hand.

'I seed you lookin' my way,' she said, with great friendliness, 'and I knowed you wuz jest spilin' to find ont what's in that there basket.'

'Pardon me,' said Brannon, freezingly, 'I had not thought of the basket. I would not have you put yourself to any trouble in explaining. I am not the conductor, you know.'

"Good land!" chuckled his self-found friend. Did ye think I took ye for the conductor? Why, he's dressed a sight smarter than you. Bright blue, and brass buttons on it, 'stid of gray. Not but what you look real nice,' she amended hastily. 'That there suit fits you to a figger and sort of agrees with your stile. I dunno but mebbe you look better in that than you would in his blue and brass.'

'Thank you,' said Bannon, with an irony totally lost.

Jerry was no snob; but the familiar manners of the owner of the basket made him rage lest the unknown sitting several seats ahead, should regard her as belonging to him. He assumed a pose of quiet iciness, which was quite undetected by the friendly dame beside him.

His indifference as to the mystery of the basket had the usual stimulating effect. She lowered her voice to a confidential pitch, determined to interest him.

'Conductor, he knows there's poultry in that there basket," she said, in a half whisper, 'but he don't know all.'

Jerry remained silent.

'They ain't no common chickens. They are thoroughbred games. I'm ataking' 'em in to a young fellow in town. I'm afeard he's goin' to fight the cock, but husband he says 'taint none of our affair.'

Jerry looked out of the window.

'That there cock,' pursued she, 'has got the wust temper in Kaintuck, an' the hens ain't much better.'

Jerry tried another tack.

'Then you had better stay by them and watch them,' he suggested artfully. 'You shouldn't leave them alone. That cover looks loose.'

"I reckon I should.' agreed the dame. 'An' yet I'm powerful thirsty. I been thinkin' 'bout that ice tank back there for some time.'

Jerry returned to his investigation of the window.

If the poultry owner had expected him to offer to bring her the desired water, she was disappointed. She arose heavily.

'I'll go get some now,' she announced. 'This here train don't go fast enough to disconcert a body

Jerry's caution returned to her mind.

She turned back and seized the handle of the basket.

'Long as you've warned me about leavin' 'em alone,' she said, at that cheerful pitch affected by those who have never heard of the 'most excellent thing in woman,' 'I reckon I'll jest set 'em by you till I get back.'

There was a resolute heave, a stagger, and the basket came down plump on the red velvet seat occupied by Jerry.

'Take good keer of 'em,' said the dame, anxiously, much as if she were going on a serious journey, and then she went cautiously toward the tank.

Jerry cast a wrathful look at the basket, but worse was to come.

Swaying and clutching the railroad's tin cup in one hand, that adventurous poultry owner found herself unable to turn the water on. The little spigot was rusty and would not move. She looked back despairingly at Jerry, and seeing only a resolute back and a sternly posed head, she lifted up her voice, instinct telling her that he had had more experience with such difficulties than any of the roughly clad men.

'Young feller,' she shrilled, 'come down here an' help me. I kain't git a drop.'

At the willing accents, each person in the car turned his head, and Jerry, blushing scarlet, saw the amused smile that danced lightly on the lips of the lovely unknown.

But he rose to the occasion. Squeezing past the basket, not without an effort, he went quietly down the aisle. If he had seen the glance of admiration which a certain person gave his broad shoulders and finely built form he might have felt compensated.

As it was, he saw only the flushed and thirsty dame, and for her he filled the tin cup courteously, wondering bitterly why fortune should place him at a disadvantage just when he most wanted to appear dignified.

Suddenly, as he waited for the poultry owner to drink that he might refill the cup for her, there arose on the hot air of the car an ear-splitting sound, a cross between a squawk and a battle-cry.

That effort of Brannon's to get past the basket had torn loose the cover, and never did prisoners more quickly avail themselves of liberty.

Wide-breasted, long of leg, arrogantly haughty of carriage, and powerful of wing, they shot out, all six of them, into the narrow precincts of the car, defiance in the hens' eyes, murder and sudden death in the cock's.

In an instant confusion reigned and a babel of tongues.

With whoops of joy and peals of rough laughter, the farmers arose en masse to help recapture the runaways; but they found it less amusing than they expected.

The conductor, hurrying in from the smoker, received a blow in the face from a resolute hen that hurled herself at the opening. Fortunately, she merely sent the conductor staggering back against the door, closing it the quicker.

'What the——!' began that outraged individual, forgetting his manners. But he got no further. The air was full of whirring wings, of wildly scrambling forms, of shrieking women and screaming children.

The games darted forward, retreated overhead, clung now to lamps, and now beat against deceptive windows; they eluded, feinted, struck savagely, wheeled on angry, rapid wings, played havoc with hats and curls, and scratched manfully.

It was the cock who selected the pretty unknown for his special prey. He came whirring down on her, having just dazed a tobacco grower by a snapping whack with his spurs; but he was received in the arms of Jerry Brannon, who had thrown himself in front of the frightened girl.

Beak and spurs had no effect on Jerry. He was thoroughbred himself. The enraged game was reduced to ignominous submission, but not until he had left an ugly scratch across each of Brannon's hands.

By this time the hens had been captured, the children had crawled from under the seats, and the women were twisting up their disordered hair.

The poultry owner, much subdued, was sniffing faintly as Jerry helped to reimprison the cock. Turning away from her and the treacherous basket, he found the unknown was standing beside him.

Casting looks of regret at his somewhat bloody hands—'I came—to help—if I can,' she said, blushing. 'And here's my father, Mr. Coulter, who wants to thank you, Mister'—Brannon,' said Jerry, joyfully.

* * * * * *

That evening the poultry raiser narrated her adventures at home.

'And I met a terrible nice young feller on the train,' she said, complacently. 'Him and me came to be real good friends. And after them chickens had flewed all around her acted jest like I'd done somethin' clever for him, while ever'body elets was grumblin' an' growlin'. Real christian, I call him.'

Why Every Man Should Praise His Wife.

Apparently there are some men in the world who would not be likely to live long if by any possibility they should be betrayed into praising their wives. The man of this description is a self-sufficient creature, who evidently believes that creation was instituted for his benefit. He is a little surprised and a good deal annoyed that things were not arranged more to his liking, but he tolerates the arrangement, not because he approves of it but because he cannot help it.

The wife of this man is a woman whom no old maid should envy. And no old maid should ever marry this man when his wife is worn out and laid in the grave; if she does she will regret it to her latest day—that is, unless she has backbone enough to put the man where he belongs and keep him there. And it is never pleasant to any true-hearted woman to feel that she has to master her husband in order to live comfortably with him. The man who never praises his wife will find fault with everything on every possible occasion. It is the easiest thing in the world to find fault—easier than the proverbial sliding down hill. It gets to be a habit with some men, and they are hardly conscious when they are exercising it.

Why cannot a man show his wife that he appreciates her efforts to please him? Why cannot he praise the pudding of his wife as well as the cooking of her neighbor, Mrs. Jones? Why cannot he speak kindly of her mince pie, and charitably of her sponge cake? Why cannot he say that the new hat is becoming to the face of the woman who loves him? Kind words make his wife happy, and no decent man ought to withhold them.—Exchange.

Hints on Cooking Vegetables.

First—Have them as fresh as possible.

Second—Look them over and wash well, cutting out all decayed or unripe parts.

Third—Lay them, when peeled, in cold water for some time before using.

Fourth—Always let water boil before putting them in, and continue to boil until done.

Turnips should be peeled and boiled from 40 minutes to an hour.

Beets—Boil from one to two hours; then put in cold water and slip skin off.

Spinach—Boil 20 minutes.

Parsnips—Boil from 20 to 30 minutes.

Onions—Best boiled in two or three waters; adding milk the last time.

String Beans—Should be boiled one and one-half hours.

Shell Beans—Should be boiled an hour.

Green Corn—Boil from 20 to 30 minutes.

Green Peas—Boil 20 minutes; should be boiled in as little water as possible.

Asparagus—Same as peas; serve on toast with cream gravy.

Cabbage—Should be boiled from one to two hours in plenty of water; salt while boiling.—Boston Post.

Fresh Air for Health.

Always breathe as much fresh air as possible.

Always, when stepping out of doors remember to breathe deeply; it quickens circulation and drives off the cold.

Again before the open window before going to bed.

Air is to the body what coal is to a furnace. The deeper the breathing the more draughts are turned on and the brighter life burns.

Practice deep breathing whenever it is possible.

It will make a woman more graceful and healthy.

It will develop the chest and broaden the shoulders.

Take the chest measurement today, practice the deep breathing from five or six times daily, and remeasure in six weeks. The measurements will prove the benefit of the exercise.

Pullets are voracious and usually eat about everything in sight. If not given enough green bone and meat, they will eat their eggs on the slightest provocation. When they lay on the floors of the houses, one broken egg will sometimes start the trouble. Where green bone can not be had, feed on meat scraps that come prepared for the 'purpose. Mix them in the noonday mash feed. Scatter strong china eggs among the litter; they discourage the habit.

A big nuisance is often a little man.

The Use of Turpentine.

Turpentine is excellent and soothing when applied to scalds and cuts.

It will take ink stains out of muslin when added to soap and also helps to whiten clothes if added to the water in which they are boiled.

Moths will not come near clothes sprinkled with turpentine; they seem to hate its odor.

A few drops of turpentine sprinkled where cockroaches congregate will exterminate them at once, while it will also drive red and black ants away.

Tan leather boots can be nicely cleaned with turpentine. Pour a few drops on a woolen cloth and rub.

White kid boots can be cleaned by rubbing them well with spirits of turpentine, using a clean white rag; they will first appear quite yellow, but must be dried before the fire and flour rubbed well into them to restore their pristine freshness. When quite dry, carefully wipe the flour off.

Turpentine applied with a bit of flannel will (especially when the stains are deep) restore the whiteness of ivory knife handles.

Gilt frames can be cleaned by wiping them with a small sponge moistened with oil of turpentine; wet the sponge only just sufficiently to take off the dirt and fly marks, then allow the frames to dry of themselves.

Turpentine is an immense bood for blisters on the hands, while it is also good for corns on the feet.

Turpentine is a simple and safe remedy for unbroken chilblains.

Persons suffering from rheumatism can have a little turpentine put in their bath water.

The method of removing spots of paint, oil, grease, or tar from silk, woolen or linen, is to pour a few drops of oil of turpentine on the place and let it soak in, say, for half an hour; then gently rub in the turpentine, when you will find the foreign substance crumbles out, as it were, leaving the fabric as before.

Carpets can be both cleaned and freshened by going over them once a week with a broom dipped in hot water that has a little turpentine in it.

New paint is readily taken out by spirits of turpentine; also, used liberally and well rubbed in, it will remove varnish from dresses, coats, etc., likewise cloth boot tops.

A mixture composed of equal parts of turpentine and linseed oil will remove white marks on furniture caused by water; rub it in with a soft rag and wipe off with a perfectly clean duster.

To remove stains from marble, take a wine-glassful of turpentine and ox gall, and mix into a paste with pipe-clay. Put the paste on the stain and let it remain two or three days.

An excellent polish for floors is made of half a pound of beeswax, shaved, put into a gallipot, and covered with turpentine: stand by the fire to dissolve. When using, put some on a flannel and afterwards brush with rather a stiff brush, such, for instance, as a scrubbing or boot brush.

Furs that become greasy in wear can be rubbed with turpentine previous to cleaning them with warm bran.

'There goes a total failure.' 'How do you know he is?' 'He's always sneering at other men's success.'
