'You mean that you like this Meta better'n you do Looizy?' incredulously.

'I must not say that,' carelessly. 'As I'm to marry Looizy, of course I'm to like her better than any girl in the world. And I'm willing to admit she is very pretty and very nice. But you can see yourself there would be a difference. Meta is well dressed and educated, and knows how to talk and entertain, and Looizy is just an ignorant—'

'Stop!' cried Calvin, hotly.

'Just an ignorant, barefooted and cheap—'

He paused suddenly, for the good and sufficient reason that Calvin had caught him in a powerful grasp and now with white and wrathful face, was holding him at arm's length, high in the air.

'Take that back, Kemp,' he cried, hoarsely. 'No man can call Looizy cheap in my hearin'.'

'Oh, well' coolly, 'if you feel that way about it, I'll take it back, of course. I was only going to say cheaply dressed, anyway. Looizy's a fine girl.'

Calvin returned him to the ground, the anger leaving his face as suddenly as it had come.

'I'm sorry I had to do that, Kemp,' he apologized, 'but nothing must be said against Looizy. If you hadn't taken it back I would have thrown you into the river.'

Kemp was readjusting his clothing calmly. Whatever else he might be, he was not a coward. And he was exhibiting remarkable self-control. He looked at Calvin curiously.

'So you are in love with Looizy yourself,' he said.

Again the red flamed to Calvin's face, then receded, leaving him white and trembling.

'Perhaps I am,' he answered, slowly, 'but it won't hurt you, not if you do the right thing. Looizy loves you, and I—well, I don't know's I need mind sayin' it—I'd give my life to please Looizy. You mean to marry her?'

'Of course, her father's worth ten thousand dollars.'

'Then I'll do everything in the world for you,' ignoring the last part of the sentence. 'You try to make Looizy happy, an'—'

There was a rustling of the foliage, and Looizy stood before them, her face pale, her eyes bright. She went straight to Calvin and placed a hand upon his arm.

'I didn't 'low to listen,' she said. 'I was lookin' at a bird's nest, and waited for you to go by. Then something was said that made me want to hear the rest. I think Kemp'd better write to Meta what she'd like most to know. He understands. An'—an' you, Calvin—' She paused and looked into his face, a soft color coming to her own.

Calvin tried to say something, but could not. And after all, there was no need for either to speak. It was all in their eyes.

SOME COSTLY EGGS.

BY ARTHUR H. J. KEANE.

From the Scientific American.

By reason of the extinction of certain classes of birds, there are many eggs which are so scarce and costly, that they can be termed rarities without fear of exaggeration. The rarest of all the eggs of a still existent family of birds is that laid by the condor. At the present moment there is not in existence one single dozen perfect specimens, and the few there are can be seen solely in some of the wealthiest and richest collections. The condor, which is found in Southern California and the Andes, is now hopelessly doomed to die out. It is also practically impossible to collect any fresh specimens of its eggs, as these rare and extremely shy birds nest thousands of feet above the plains, in the most rugged and inaccessible fastnesses of the San Bernardino and San Jacinto Mountains. Hence finding and plundering (two very different things, by the bye) a condor's nest is regarded as a most wonderful and sensational event; in fact, a prize of $500 would not tempt any sane man to start out on the hunt for a fresh condor egg.

Still more costly are the eggs of the great auk, or garefowl, a flightless marine bird, with large head, heavy body, and compact plumage, the last two living specimens of which were discovered and killed in Iceland in the year 1844. One of these eggs is now to be seen, carefully preserved under a glass case, in the National Museum at Washington; the original owner sold it in London for £22 ($110) in the year 1851, whereas its present value is estimated at more than £2,000 ($10,000.) In 1853 two other auks' eggs were sold in London for £85 ($425) apiece, while in 1869 a nobleman (Lord Caervagh) paid £74 ($370) for a damaged specimen. A Scotchman of the name of Powell was fortunate to buy two of these eggs in Edinburg in 1879 for a mere song, viz. 32 shillings; a few weeks afterward he sold them for £240 ($1,200) each. In 1887 an auk's egg, which was sold for £40 ($200) in 1867, realized $800 in America. At the present time there are only from 70 to 80 specimens known to be still in existence; 12 of these are in the British Museum (London). This bird died out because of its inability to fly, and of the difficulty of its movements upon dry land. It used to nest in thousands on Funk Island (a rocky islet opposite the coast of Newfoundland) which at one time was used as a kind of provisioning station by whalers, who used to kill these fat and palatable birds in hundreds. The birds were knocked on the head with clubs, plucked (the feathers used to fetch a good price) and salted for future consumption.

Funk Island also used to afford shelter every year, at breeding time, to countless numbers of other natatory birds, among them being the white booby (Sula Bassana). These birds have also met with the same fate as the auk. In the year 1860 their nests were still to be seen in thousands, but at the time of writing it would probably be a matter of impossibility to find one solitary specimen. Ruthless slaughter, and the scaring away of the birds—due to the erection of a signal station on the island, which used to fire off a shot every minute in foggy weather—soon led to a thinning of their ranks, and the price of their eggs already began to rise in the seventies. Now they are great rarities, and would fetch large sums, but unfortunately there are no specimens in the market. Some specimens are on view at the Smithsonian Institution and at the American Museum of Natural History in New York: they range in value from $500 to $750 apiece.

Large sums are also paid for the eggs of the aepyornis or moa, a gigantic wingless bird of from 12 to 14 feet in height, which as long ago as two hundred years was already out in Madagascar. In appearance the bird much resembles the ostrich, and its egg was one foot in length. The first specimen was brought to Europe (Paris) by a French merchant in 1851, and caused quite a sensation from the amount of interest it attracted; its cubic capacity is about equal to that of one hundred goose eggs. In 1897 one of these eggs was found swimming about on the south-west coast of the island of Madagascar, in Augustine Bay. It now lies in the British Museum, and is undoubtedly one of the most extraordinary and valuable relics of its kind.

The eggs of the aptornis, a recently extinct wingless bird, probably a member of the Rallidæ family, also fetch very high prices, fine colored specimens fetching as much as $750 $1,000 apiece. The apteryx or New Zealand kiwi is a bird which, though still living, is becoming scarcer from day to day, and its final extinction is only a question of years. These kiwi breed very slowly, only one or two very large eggs being laid during the season, and as yet there is no record of the successful rearing of young in captivity. Speculators might do much worse than to buy up as many eggs of this bird as they can get hold of, for, although now carefully protected, it is to be feared that the specimens now existing are the last of their kind.

Collectors also pay good prices for the eggs of the golden eagle, the East Indian swallow, the Californian parrot or "popinjay," etc., and for those of all similar birds which make their nests in such inaccessible spots that their obtaining is a matter of difficulty and danger of life.

The ordinary barndoor fowl "breakfast table" egg has also a fancy value—sometimes, to wit, when like wine it has "improved" with age. We rudely term such eggs "rotten." In China, however, such an egg is a delicacy of the first water, and the well-to-do pay high prices for a real good old egg of the "blue-blooded" type that has had "ample time to mature."

Beginning of Lent.

Lent, the penitential season, wiil begin Wednesday, February 28th, the fortieth day before Easter, which this year falls on Sunday, April 15th. Palm Sunday this year falls on April 8th; Maundy Thursday and Good Friday on the 12th, and 13th of the month. Septuagesima Sunday, the third Sunday before Lent and the seventh day—reckoning in round numbers—before Easter, occurs on February 11th. Sexagesima Sunday on February 18th, and Quinquagesima Sunday on February 25th. Originally the time extending from Septuagesima Sunday to Ash Wednesday was known and observed as Shrove-tide. Shrove-tide means confession time. In early days of the church the whole period after Septuagesima Sunday seems to have been a time for preparation for the penitential season of Lent, the chief part of which preparation consisted in receiving the sacrament of penance—in being 'shriven' or confessing.

Utilizing Year-Old Hens.

While it is a good plan to depend most largely upon the pullets for eggs during the winter, the year-old hens will be laying in good shape, but it is not a good plan to push these birds too hard, provided they are of good breed and have a good record as egg-producers, says the Rural Home. Let them lay well, of course, and feed them properly, but plan for them to produce their best eggs at breeding season, being sure to mate them up with the best male obtainable. The eggs from these year-old hens, if they are the right sort of hens, will turn out better chicks than the eggs from the pullets. Another point just here, if you are not in a position to use incubators the coming season, it will pay to get together a few year or two-year-old hens of the larger mixture to use as incubators. Never mind if they are not pure-breds, if they are large and broody they will make ideal mothers set on high grade eggs, and will be worth their keep for this purpose alone.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY. NEW YORK CITY.

AN EARLY SPRING DREAM.

A millionaire was standing by
A vacant lot one day.
He gazed upon a lot of boys,
At baseball they did play.
Among the crowd he saw a boy,
A child of tender years;
It was his worthless office boy,
With large and flapping ears.

Alas! the millionaire did sigh,
He'd fired that office boy
That very day, an hour before,
From out of his employ.
He would not have the boy around
Because the boy was dumb;
So dumb he did not know enough
Out of the rain to come.

The little boy played shortstop and
A stinger came his way,
He calmly took it with his left,
And made a double play,
He nailed a grounder sizzling hot
And slammed it swiftly home
In time to stop a runner there
Who on the run did come.

In time it was his turn to bat,
The bases they were full,
He whacked the leather over second
In manner beautiful.
And while the fielder threw it wild
And three fine runs came in,
The office boy flew round to third
And quietly wiped his chin.

The millionaire jumped up and down
And shouted in his glee,
He never guessed that office boy
So great a man could be,
And when the game was o'er at last
He unto him did say,
"If you'll come back and work for me,
I'll give you double p'ay."

PREDICTIONS FOR 1906.

Some Of The Things Spangler Says Will Happen.

Here are Spangler's prophecies for 1906:

The dissolution of Russia.

The overthrow of Turkey.

The assassination of the Czar of Russia.

The assassination of the Sultan of Turkey.

The prevention of three wars by President Roosevelt.

A protracted race war in the South.

Destructive spring floods in the United States.

A destructive eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

The activity of Mont Pelee and Popocatepetl.

Volcanic eruptions in all parts of the world.

The eruption of many volcanoes now supposed to be extinct.

Great loss of life at sea by storms.

Destruction of two Western cities by cyclones.

Earthquakes in all parts of the world.

Destructive earthquakes in California and the Philippines.

Rebellion in Spain.

Great disturbances all over Europe.

Spangler says further that the summer of 1906 will be hot and sultry throughout the temperate zone, with extensive death rate.

That Christ will make His Spirit felt among the peoples of the United States and England, in which countries there are to be fervent religious and potent political movements which are to overcome in a great degree the present spirit of graft and commercialism.

That the United States will continue as a world power and the leader of other nations.

That Pennsylvania is to have an administration of the people, and that corruption will be discovered which will drive some of the guilty to suicide.

That God will wreak terrible vengeance upon the Russians for the massacre of the Jews.—New York World.

A man went into a chemist's shop and bought a bottle of some patent stuff, which was advertised thus: 'No more coughs, no more colds. One shilling the bottle.' Three days later he went to the chemist, complaining that his throat was stopped up and that he could scarcely breathe. 'I've drunk all that patent cough mixture,' he said.

'Drunk it!' yelled the chemist. 'Why, that's an india rubber solution to put on the soles of your boots.'

In the past six months taps have been sounded over the graves of 28,006 pensioners of the Civil War, according to a statement of Pension Commissioner Warner last week. This, he says, is an evidence of the rapidity with which the veterans are being diminished. The total number of pensioners on July 1, 1905, was 684,608. On December 31 it was 679,234.

"I have here, sir,' began the book agent, "a volume containing 52 lectures by 52 great men. One lecture for every week in the year."

Why Not Cure Your Cough or Cold?

WESTMINSTER, April 10th, 1890.

MR. JOS. B. BOYLE:

Dear Sir:—For many years I have suffered intensely, on taking cold, from a very troublesome cough, for which I have used a number of various remedies, and obtained but TEMPORARY RELIEF. During the past Spring I was again troubled with the same cough, and through a friend was induced to try YOUR Pectoral Syrup, which not only gave almost INSTANT RELIEF, but a PERMANENT CURE. It gives me great pleasure to say that I believe it to be the best remedy I ever used for the purpose for which it is recommended. Hoping that any person afflicted as I was may be fortunate enough to give it a trial, I am,

Truly yours,
EDWARD LYNCH.
