The "Cruelty Man's" Adventure.

BY C. A. STEPHENS.

When the President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals made his first visit to our rural county, in 1891, with a view to extending the aegis of kindness and mercy over the four-footed dumb servants of man in that region, his first and greatest concern was to find the right man to be the Society's resident agent. 'Experience has taught us,' he said, 'that we do not want our agent to be too smart or too zealous. We do not want an officious or a talkative man. We do not want a man with political aspirations. We do not want a jockey or a horse-fancier, or a mere lover of dogs, cats and birds.

'What we do want is a man with a great, big, kind heart, a man of even temper and slow to anger.'

It seemed very hard to find such a man, and for a time we were left unsupplied. Finally, in despair, the president offered the place to me. Although painfully aware of my deficiencies, I accepted the appointment and qualified for the office.

Now, the pecuniary reward of the society's agent in a rural town is not large. It is one of those offices which a person must hold, in part at least, for the love of seeing the right thing done. For that reason, no doubt, none of my fellow citizens have tried to get the office from me. I have held it, unmolested by rival candidates, for eleven years.

As to the duties, often for weeks and weeks there is nothing for the 'cruelty man' to do. Then of a sudden there will come a week when everybody's heart seems to be hard. Teamsters are reported as overloading and beating their horses or oxen, and I have to look them up and admonish, or arrest, if the case be flagrant and the offender defiant.

At times, too, as the winter advances and fodder becomes scarce, some parsimonious farmer will half-starve his cattle, his sheep or his hogs, rather than buy hay and corn for them.

When such instances are discovered I have to visit the offender and remonstrate with him. If he defies the society, I have to take his animals from him, and have them boarded by some other farmer at their stingy owner's expense, till he is glad to yield and do better in the future. There are times when 'there is nothing so conciliating as a little severity.'

On the whole, there is much less cruelty to animals than there used to be. The very presence of a society agent, and the known fact that he is vigilant and can be spoken to by telephone from all parts of the county, act as constant deterrents to cruelty.

My queerest case came on July 3rd, last year. That evening, about nine o'clock, a lady who lived at a village several miles away, telephoned to me to come there at once.

Two Italians, she said, were brutally beating a bear, a pet performing bear, which they had brought to the village that afternoon to appear in the Fourth of July parade. Another excited lady here spoke into the telephone, and said that there were two bears, 'cinnamon bears,' and that the Italians were maltreating them frightfully.

'They are at an old barn on the meadow, half a mile from the village, but we can hear them howl and roar!' she exclaimed. 'It's something awful! You must come at once!'

I had never been called on to protect bears, and was a little uncertain as to whether I could legally act. For the bear is held to be a dangerous wild beast, and so far as I know there is no law in his favor—except, perhaps, the great unwritten law of kindness to everything that lives and breathes.

But even as I pondered the matter there came another call from those urgent ladies. To ease their minds, if nothing more, I decided to act; and hitching up my black mare, I drove to the village in a little better than twenty minutes.

I knew the place well, and if I had not known it the crowd gathered at the window where the old barn stood would have been a sufficient guide to the scene of disturbance. By the time I had come in sight I heard the bears, also a strange medley of outlandish cries and imprecations.

None of the excited onlookers had even ventured to approach nearer than the other end of the meadow. As I drove up some hailed me to say that the Italians were killing the bears; others that the bears were killing the Italians. It was any one's guess which, from the sounds.

A 'cruelty man' must show courage when the public eye is on him, whether he feels it or not. I procured a lantern, then went to one of the barn doors, pulled away a prop and looked in.

There was a bad state of things inside. As soon as I could bring the light to bear, I discovered a man, groaning and crying out in one of the horse-stalls. His clothing was torn nearly off, and he was covered with blood.

The bears—big, ugly brutes, indeed—were still attempting to reach him, and were only held at bay by a little old Italian, standing just inside the stall, who thrust a pole having a sharp steel spike fastened in the end of it into the enraged animals' heads as often as they rushed forward.

The activity of the little old man with the pole was marvelous. Both bears were bleeding profusely from the prods he had given them. Their roars were blood-curdling.

A youthful villager had now appeared on the scene with a heavy rifle, and taking it from him, I was about to bear a hand in the matter by shooting both bears, when the cries and frantic gesticulations of the little Italian led me to pause.

'No shoota! No shoota da bear!' he screamed. 'Alla me mounee! I paya licenza! I paya tariffa! No shota da bear!' No shoota he!'

He screamed, he cried, he shook the spiked pole at me—but never for an instant neglected warding the bears away from his wounded companion.

I began to see that property rights were vested in the bears and that the matter of livelihood with these swarthy little men was dearer than life itself; for even the injured one feebly raised his head and cried, 'No shoota da bear!'

But rescue was clearly the first duty. I entered at a rear door, behind the horse-stalls, and by removing a few boards, contrived to drag out the helpless Italian.

He was in a bad plight. Not only had he been severely bitten and lacerated about the face, neck and arms, but his left leg was broken above the knee.

I sent for a physician in haste; and meanwhile the lemantations of the older Italian over his companion were touching to hear. They were father and son, and when I came to make out their story the affair was really pathetic.

Times in Florence were hard, oh, so hard, with them! And there was also the army conscription. At last they had sold out their little shop, invested the proceeds in these two bears from the Pyreneese Mountains and came to America—for they had heard stories how the rich American poeple at their festivals were accustomed to shower golden coin on the owners of performing animals. Such rumors often pass current in the old countries of Europe.

But nothing but trouble had been their portion from the time they sailed for New York up to this last supreme mishap.

The American custom duty on their bears swept away their very last lira, and when they had gone forth to perform with them, the people had but laughed and given nickel pieces instead of silver and gold.

And now the little old man wept bitterly, for he feared Pietro would die and leave him quite alone with his bears in this strange heartless land.

There was also a background of anxiety in far-off Italy, where an old wife and three daughters were now impatiently waiting for means—earned by these performing bears—to follow them to America.

The bears were called 'cinnamon,' but in reality they were brown bears. While travelling and performing they were kept muzzled, and were led about by chains. When prodded by their masters the big brutes would rise on their hind legs and dance together, also climb trees, walk with a cane, beg, and 'sing' if a frightful whimpering, elicited by prods, could be called singing. When standing erect by aid of a pole grasped in their paws, the bears were fully eight feet tall.

At last, in the devious wanderings, father and son reached this remote hamlet, and that evening had obtained permission to shelter and feed their bears in this old barn. When the muzzles had been removed, however, to give the animals their supper, the larger bear had leaped furiously upon Pietro.

One of the excited ladies who had telephoned to me about the bears gave further proof of the kindness of her heart by taking the disabled young Italian into her house, where his injuries were cared for.

I was left with two unmuzzled and ravening bears on my hands. The crowd promptly advised shooting them, and I was about to use the rifle, but was restrained by the prayers of the old Italian. Finally I contented myself with nailing up the barn securely, so that the bears should not break out.

The next day the bears were hungry, and savage from the wounds they had received. Mischievous fellows, too, of the village rowdy type, were hanging round the barn, bent on having sport with the animals. I had to warn these off the premises, and I passed most of my Fourth of July guarding, feeding and watering those bears.

The next day the old Italian was taken ill. His son also lay in a critical condition, and the bears still demanded my attention. It was a long time before the older man was able even to feed the animals. Their stock of money, too, was exhausted, and not to dwell on details, I furnished vegetables and daily bread for the bears for five weeks, before these poor people recovered sufficiently to secure their pets and take to the road again. The day did at last come, however, when we succeeded in drugging the animals, and so muzzling and chaining them. Their spirits seemed to have been subdued by confinement, and the last I saw of them they were proceeding along the road in proper docility.

Neither the society nor the town authorities were inclined to reimburse me, taking the ground that I should have despatched the bears at once. So I had to pay for the support of the bears out of my own pocket. But I have never been sorry for the expenditure.

The area of the city is 46 square miles.

The first settlement on the shores of San Francisco bay was made in 1786, when two Franciscan monks, Palou and Cambon by name, founded an Indian mission in 1846. California was ceded to the United States by Mexico and on the heels of the change of Government came the discovery of gold.

A great part of San Francisco has been reclaimed from San Francisco bay. Many buildings were built on piles driven through the sand to bedrock.

Seen from the bay, the city was only exceeded in picturesqueness by the mountain of skyscrapers on Manhattan island, or by Havana, with its marvelous Moorish coloring. It is built on a range of steep hills, and from a distance the houses of many of the residence sections seem to be piled on top of each other.

Whitewash Superior to Paint.

The season for whitewashing being again at hand, the following whitewash recipe may be of interest (clip it out and keep it until you are ready to begin your brush work):

"The White House got its name originally from the wonderful whiteness of the wash it was coated with. An old newspaper gives the composition of this whitewash as follows: Take half a bushel of unslacked lime, slake it with boiling water, strain through coarse canvass and add a peck of salt dissolved in warm water. Then put in three pounds of ground rice, boiled to a thin paste and pour in hot, half a pound of whiting and one pound of fine glue, dissolved in warm water. This mixture is said to last practically forever and to be superior to white paint.

Removing Warts From Teats.

Warts on the teats and udder are often very bothersome in milking. They can be gotten rid of in this way, according to the Iowa Agriculturist:

'Clean the udder with a mild creolin solution of about a teaspoonful of the creolin and a bucket of water. Then cut off the warts with common scissors or a knife and touch the roots with a pencil of silver nitrate. The only treatment needed after this is that of keeping the udder and teats softened with lard. Sometimes it is necessary to repeat the whole performance, but this is very seldom.'

A man's fate lies in his character, and not in his conditions.

The Girl Who Clerks and the Girl who Lives Out.

All is not gold that glitters. There appears to be more attraction in the store than in the kitchen for many girls. Yet are not the girls who live out much better off, as a rule, than the girl who stands behind the counter! We think so.

The term servant may not be applied to the clerks as it is applied to the girls who live out, yet we are all designated as servant by the Holy Scripture. The final blessing will be couched in the words: 'Well done, good and faithful servant.'

As a matter of fact, the girl in the store is much more of a servant than the girl who works out. The clerk is under the constant supervision of a taskmaster in the person of the floorwalker, or in that of the proprietor. The clerks must stand and look pleasant the whole day long, whether they are in the humor of doing so or not. Their duties are exacting and often burdensome.

The touchstone of all labor is the compensation. The clerk may get more actual money on pay day, but when street car fare, room rent, clothing and board bill are settled, the net gain of the clerk is less than that of the girl who works out.

The girl who works out has, as a rule, better board and a better room and more home-like surroundings than the clerk. She is more thought of and gets more consideration than the clerk, and is nearer to those for whom she works.

The girl who works out is not exposed to as many temptations as the clerk, and can exercise more liberty in choosing her companions. In addition to that, she is, as a rule, better fitted to preside over a house of her own when, as it is to be expected, she will be called to the matrimonial state. While there are good and exemplary girls engaged in clerking, were we asked as to the choosing of the better part, we would unhesitatingly direct the young woman who has to earn her living to choose domestic service.

As people must be fitted for the tasks they undertake, proper knowledge and adaptability should pave the way to success.—Catholic Universe.
