He did not make as good time between Taneytown and this city because, he said, the road was heavy and there were 17 hills to climb. He did not stop here but drove to Reisterstown, and went thence to Baltimore by the electric railroad.

The Mayor and Common Council of this city give notice, by advertisement in another column, that, unless taxes due for the year 1905 and previously shall be paid by the 1st of November proximo, suit will be brought to compel payment. Champion Watermelons.

The Silver Run correspondent of the Advocate in last week's letter to that paper said: "Jacob D. Petry, of near Cherrytown, is the champion watermelon and canteloupe farmer, he had wagon loads of them. Quite a number weighing from 20 to 24, and one that tipped the beam at 25 pounds, and a canteloupe that weighed 11 pounds. If there are any who can beat that we would like to hear from them."

Mr. J. M. Myers, of Bachman's Valley, accepts the friendly challenge and says he can beat Mr. Petry's watermelons, at least in size. He planted eight hills from which he gathered 50 fine melons, of delicious flavor, some of which weighed from 30 to 34 pounds. It is now his turn to ask whether anybody in this county can beat that. If not he is entitled to claim the championship for weight.

Rev. T. H. Lewis D. D.

Dr. J. W. Hering, of this city, has had a very pleasant letter from Rev. T. H. Lewis, D. D., president of Western Maryland College, who has been traveling abroad since June last. It was written from Lausanne, Switzerland, under date of September 20th. The many friends of Dr. Lewis will be glad to know that he is getting along nicely, and enjoying his trip.

The following extract from his letter will be read with interest. "I think I am doing pretty well. I sleep better, have a good appetite, and although I think I am somewhat thinner, so far as I can judge I am physically in fairly good condition. I have been sitting quietly here in Lausanne, since my return from the Alpine trip, nearly a month ago, having really no desire to travel and supposing that it would be better not to press myself to travel, just because I am abroad. It is comfortable here, although it is getting rather too crowded now, and I do not know that I could have done better. Next Wednesday we break up. The girls are going to Paris, in the family where we stopped last July, a very delightful home, I think, and I am going south to Milan, Venice, Florence, Rome, Naples, until Oct. 13th, when I sail from Naples for Greece, Syria, Palestine and Egypt. I expect to return to Paris about the last of November. It is then my plan to take the girls a little trip up through Belgium and Holland and sail from Rotterdam for New York the first of December.

"How I wish I could have your company on the Palestine trip. It is very attractive. We enter from the north, going first to Athens, then Smyrna, Constantinople, Baalbek and Damascus. From there we go camping and riding horseback down the centre of Palestine for two weeks, to get to Jerusalem. I shall not be in Bethlehem on Christmas day, as I had fondly dreamed. That is the rainy season, and this is the last tour until after January."

About the same time her husband, who was making weekly visits to his family, was attacked by the same disease, at his home in Baltimore, and was so critically ill that his physician decided it prudent to withhold from him the news of her death, fearing it might prove fatal in his case. Mr. Morelock was a native of this county and never resided outside of its borders. He was a man universally esteemed for his upright and honorable character and had many warm and devoted friends, drawn to him by his genial and kindly disposition. He was, indeed, a very gentle and loveable man and endeared to all with whom he came in contact. But he was also strong in his convictions of right and duty and firm in maintaining them. He was a staunch Republican politically and always decided in maintaining his principles. In religious faith he adhered devotedly to the Reformed Church of which he was for many years a member. He leaves a widow, two sons and a daughter—Prof. A. Bailey Morelock, the well known leader of The First Regiment Band; Prof. George F. Large numbers of the old friends and neighbors of the deceased attended the obsequies. A short service had been held at the late home of the deceased in this city before the church service.
