REPUBLICAN TICKET.

FOR CONGRESS,

ROBERT GARRETT,

OF BALTIMORE COUNTY.

ELECTION, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6TH.

CUBAN AFFAIRS.

Secretary Taft's governorship of Cuba, as has been well understood, was temporary and designed to be brief, and he is succeeded by Judge Charles E. Magoon, who left Washington for Havana, on Saturday last, to assume the position.

Mr. Taft's management of Cuban affairs under American intervention for the restoration of order has been of a masterly character. Every effort to avoid unnecessary friction in dealing with the conflicting elements of the Island has been made, consistent with the strong hand and firm action required under the circumstances, and, practically, the insurrection is at an end and peace reigns. Most of the insurgents voluntarily laid down their arms and those who refused to do so have been disarmed.

Gov. Magoon finds the most difficult part of the work of pacification accomplished. He will, however, need wisdom and superior statesmanship to prevent trouble when the time shall arrive to elect a President and Congress in the young republic, and must see to it that the election shall be without taint of corruption or unfairness. He will need the aid of American military to accomplish that purpose, but troops will not, apparently, be required in considerable numbers to preserve order otherwise. He will be, during his incumbency of the governor's office, a Cuban official and his salary will be paid out of the Cuban treasury. It is probable that the heavy expenses incurred by the United States, to restore order and rehabilitate the government of the republic, will have to be borne by this country, and the fact should admonish the Cubans that a repetition of this condition would probably cost them their independence. If they cannot govern themselves without becoming a nuisance to their neighbors they must consent to be governed and will certainly be taken over by this country. In that case, too, the Island should be held in the same relation to the country as is Porto Rico, instead of being converted into a State or States of the Union.

This is, however, only speculation and it is to be hoped Cuba will become a stable and enduring republic.

GIVE THE RATE LAW A TRIAL.

The weakness for agitaion and efforts at legislation, without waiting for the trial of laws already enacted, was never more forcibly illustrated than in the present attitude of Mr. Bryan, the "peerless leader" of the Democrats, toward the new rate regulation law. In one and the same breath Mr. Bryan claims the credit for this new legislation, and condemns it to failure. He boasts that President Roosevelt went to the Democratic platform for his inspiration, and at the same time he declares that no rate legislation can be successful, and that the Government must take over the ownership and operation of all railroads to settle the vexed question rates. In this inconsistent position Mr. Bryan illustrates the difference between agitation and statesmanship. The agitator is not looking to the peace and prosperity of the country so much as he is looking after his own notoriety. We have had agitators from the beginning of time, and they have been much like Mr. Bryan, but they never accomplished anything for the public good.

This is a government of law and not a government of men. The law is the supreme force, and the more stable the law is the more secure the interests of the country will be. Legislation is not the chief aim of the government. It is only incidental—to correct the law after that proves to be a failure or erroneous. But Mr. Bryan seems to think that when Congress has enacted a law the purpose of the enactment is complete, and that a new campaign for new law is in order. He claims credit for an idea as soon as it is worked out in legislation. If the idea was good as it appeared in the Democratic platform, why is it not equally good when it appears in the statute? Why not try the law?

But Mr. Bryan abandons the child he claims as his own, as soon as it reaches maturity. He has now found a new subject for agitation, and it is not new even in this country as an agitation. The Populists and the Socialists are several years ahead of Mr. Bryan in demanding government ownership of railroads. These men live and thrive by agitation, and in what manner does Mr. Bryan differ from those who have for ten years demanded goverment ownership under the name of Socialists? The new rate law is on the statute books, and the President is preparing for its strict enforcement. Unless he can do that the law will be so much wasted paper. It is a good time for the agitators who agitate to take a back seat and wait until the law has been given a trial.

The Martinsburg, W. Va., correspondent of the Baltimore American, writing to that paper on Friday last, tells of the tragic death of a young man named Frederick Cowan and his 17-year-old bride. The young couple had eloped and were just married by a minister near Martinsburg. They were anxious to make a train on the railroad and in order to do so took a short cut across a meadow in which a savage bull was feeding. The bride was wearing a red gown which enraged the animal and he attacked her viciously. Her husband sought to protect her and was gored and trampled to death by the bull, which then tossed her on his horns and threw her over a fence, injuring her so severely that she died in a few minutes. The tragedy occurred within fifteen minutes after the marriage ceremony had been performed. The account did not state the maiden name of the bride nor tell where she and her husband were from.

Next week Waynesboro, Pa., will entertain the members of the Maryland Synod of the Lutheran church. There will be probably 115 ministers and almost as many laymen in attendance. The synod will convene on Thursday evening, Oct. 18th, in the Lutheran church, and will remain in session over the following Sunday.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S HARRISBURG ADDRESS.

It is unfortunate that, notwithstanding the wide publicity given the utterances of public men in this country, by the daily press, they seem to be soon forgotten, no matter how great their importance may be, and their effect upon the public mind is quickly dissipated and passes away even as a vapor which only "endureth for a little time." A week ago the country was ringing with the great speech made by President Roosevelt at the dedication of the new capitol of Pennsylvania, at Harrisburg. Today, to judge by outward appearances, the public has only a languid interest in the leading subject discussed on the occasion referred to, and in the opinions so forcibly and well expressed by the President. Perhaps this is due to the fact that most of the American people are optimistic and believe that no matter what danger may threaten the peace and perpetuity of the country, somehow and in some way it will be successfully met and overcome.

Some of these dangers were pointed out by the President in his Harrisburg speech, and the proper method of dealing with them suggested. The danger from the increasing power of great corporations was discussed and their control by law laid down as imperative, if such danger is to be averted. Such utterances by the President were not singular. Most thoughtful citizens have felt and probably expressed similar opinions, while at the same time bemoaning the inadequacy of governmental machinery to deal with and correct the evils which awaken such apprehensions. It has been felt that the railroad rate bill may be a stretch of constitutional authority and may not stand the test of the courts. It is generally thought that the difficulty in the way of curbing the dangerous powers of other great corporations lies in the limited constitutional power of the General Government and the rights of the States over such organizations. Under the power to regulate commerce, conferred upon the General Government by the National Constitution, there seems to be little reason to fear an adverse decision upon the rate law by the Supreme Court, but how, is asked by many persons, can this authority to regulate commerce apply to great corporations, which hold their charters under State authority, although their business extends through many States, and thus renders it difficult, if not impossible, for a single State to curb their power?

And just here the President advanced an opinion, in his Harrisburg speech, which seems tenable and just. He holds, substantially, that there cannot be a gap between Federal and State authority; in brief, that what the State cannot do the General Government may do, and that these great corporations, doing business in many States, can be regulated and controlled by National law, under the provision of the constitution giving to the United States the power to regulate commerce between the States, without trenching upon States' rights. If he be correct in this conclusion and power is vested in Congress to pass laws to that effect, some check may soon be placed upon the rapacity of these overgrown and powerful organizations.

It is, of course, understood, that it is no part of the purpose of the President to destroy corporations and he was careful to so declare in laying down the proposition which is here stated as briefly as possible, and which should be kept in the public mind and urged upon the public conscience, even by frequent repetition if necessary.

It is not to be understood that the words "regulate and control" in the aforegoing article, mean to take the management of, but simply to make unlawful and prevent combinations or "trusts" in restraint of manufactures, trade and commerce.

ROBERT GARRETT'S PART IN POLITICS.

The following article from the Baltimore Sunday American sketches the history and pays a just tribute to the character of Mr. Robert Garrett, the Republican nominee for Congress in this district. Mr. Garrett is a square man politically as well as in all other walks of life, a man to be trusted and the kind of man needed at this juncture in public affairs, when a determined crusade is being made upon the political methods with which his opponent, Mr. Talbott, has so long been identified:

"Mr. Robert Garrett, the Republican candidate for Congress in the Second district, is a young man whose participation in politics ought to be welcomed and encouraged, for he is a man who adds luster to public life. There is not today in Maryland a man who is striving more earnestly and more zealously for the upbuilding of politics than is Mr. Garrett, nor is there a man who is less selfish than he in his devotion to his party and to good government. Other men possessing Mr. Garrett's means would be content to devote their lives to ease, to enjoyment of luxuries and perhaps to dissipation. He has chosen to try to make his life useful to his fellow-men. He has placed one of his outdoor gymnasiums upon the premises of the Playground Association in West Woodberry, where he furnishes for two months at least a skilled athletic professor to instruct day and night classes of men and boys and women and girls, graded in several divisions, according to age and development.

"He deeded to the city, free of charge, property that was needed for the widening of Light street. He and his brother have given a tract of over 2,000 acres in the Allegheny Mountains as a forest reserve. Mr. Garrett has also taken a warm interest in the Govanstown Y. M. C. A. and has contributed generously to it. He is a member of the Towson Lodge of Elks and is probably the wealthiest member of that order.

THE GARRETT FAMILY.

"The name of the Garretts is indissolubly linked with the history of this city and state, and to no small extent with that of the country. While the family name became famous because of the impress made upon its times by John W. Garrett, for many years the head and active spirit of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, yet had not this distinguished member of the family directed his genius toward the development of the greatest agency of the age, the name of Garrett would, nevertheless, be a conspicuous one in the annals of Baltimore. Long before John W. Garrett had identified himself with one of America's great railroads the firm of Robert Garrett & Sons was widely known as a solid and enterprising business house. It was founded in 1836 by Robert Garrett, a native of Ireland, who had become a resident of Baltimore in 1804. The establishment was first located at 34 North Howard street, and later in connection with general merchandising, he inaugurated a banking department. This branch developed favorably, and the firm became the correspondent and representative of the banking house of George Peabody & Co., London, and of other European bankers, as well as of mercantile firms of Western States.

AT HEAD OF BANKING FIRM.

"When they had reached the proper age, Henry S. Garrett and John W. Garrett, sons of the founder, became members of the firm, the name of which afterwards became Robert Garrett & Sons, and is known by that title to this day. The house became exclusively a banking establishment and removed to South street, below Baltimore, where it was located for many years. This firm was among the first to appreciate the value of quick communication between Baltimore and the West by means of steam railway facilities, and this banking house took an active part in the development of the transportation business.

"After John W. Garrett had become the senior member of the establishment he took his two sons, Robert and T. Harrison Garrett, into the firm and upon the death of the elder Garrett, in 1884, the sons continued the business. Robert Garrett succeeded his father as president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. T. Harrison Garrett's death occurred on June 7, 1888, leaving Robert Garrett as the surviving member. The last named member died on July 29, 1896. The firm now consists of the two sons of T. Harrison Garrett, Messrs. John W. Garrett and Robert Garrett.

"Mr. John W. Garrett is in the diplomatic service abroad. To Mr. Robert Garrett has fallen the active management of the firm's business. Mr. Garrett has not much more than passed his thirtieth year. He is a graduate of Princeton University, having completed his course in 1897. He is now a trustee of the university, and probably the youngest man ever intrusted with such high honor.

"While at Princeton he achieved distinction not only in his studies, but on the athletic field and track, and upon the occasion of the holding of the Olympic games at Athens, Greece, in 1896, he beat the Grecians at their own game of throwing the discus. After his graduation, in 1897, he returned to Baltimore, and has since made his home with his mother at their residence, Evergreen, on Charles Street avenue extended.

IN PUBLIC LIFE.

"Mr. Garrett is a young man of literary and studious tastes, and has given a great deal of thought to the public questions which he may be called upon to discuss in the event of his election. His father, the late T. Harrison Garrett, was an independent voter upon both national and local questions, and it is stated that his son at first had Democratic tendencies, although, like his father, he was inclined to be independent in his views. The free silver heresy, however, completely alienated him from the Democratic party. In 1903 he was the Republican nominee for the state legislature in Baltimore county, being defeated in the general Democratic landslide.

"In 1904 he accepted the Republican nomination for Congress in the Second district. While defeated he was not daunted, and again last year he permitted his name to appear on the county ticket as a candidate for the legislature when a vacancy occurred. It was a sacrifice for him to become a candidate, but that plays no part in his makeup. He led his ticket. Again this year he consented to become a candidate for Congress.

GROWING IN FAVOR.

"Mr. Garrett has grown constantly in public favor since he appeared as a candidate for public honors. He will continue to grow in public estimation, and the time is not distant, according to the view of those who best know him, when he will rank as one of the foremost men in the state. If he chose to spend a portion of his wealth, as wealth has sometimes been expended, in politics, he would have been more successful, but Mr. Garrett is not a politician of that caliber. If he cannot be accepted for his worth as a man he will not be accepted at all.

"In the present campaign Mr. Garrett is waging warfare upon what is termed "Talbottism" in Baltimore county. He is making no personal warfare against Mr. Talbott. He is only holding Mr. Talbott as a dominant Democratic factor in Baltimore county responsible for abuses, for violations of the law and for other shortcomings in the county which Mr. Talbott has the power to correct. In his fight Mr. Garrett is aided by the best men in the district. It is only a question of time when Baltimore will be put through the crucible of a complete reform. Mr. Garrett is not a man who is easily discouraged."

WINTER IN OCTOBER.

The unseasonable cold weather felt here for several days past at this time extends all over the country and is unusually severe for this period of the year. In some sections violent storms have prevailed.

Six inches of snow fell in Pennsylvania, the storm raging two hours.

Killing frosts appeared in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, the Carolinas, Texas and Tennessee.

For twenty-four hours or longer snow fell in Buffalo, N. Y.

Vessels on the Great Lakes, which had been fighting snow and high gales for two days, arrived coated with ice.

Flurries of snow visited Snow Hill, Md.

Sleet in the State of New York carried down wires, cutting off cities from the rest of the world.

Gen. John R. King, who has made a fine record as United States Pension Agent and was recently reappointed by President Roosevelt, was born in Hagerstown 60 years ago. He went to Baltimore in 1859 and learned the printing business in the office of James Young. When the Civil War broke out he volunteered at the age of 17 in the Sixth Regiment, Maryland Volunteers, and served through the war. He was wounded three times and a prisoner of war six months.

Forty miners lost their lives by an explosion in the West Fork Mines of the Pocahontas Collieries Company, near Bluefield, W. Va., on Wednesday of last week.

Miss Jane Zacharias, daughter of the late Rev. Dr. Daniel Zacharias, died at the Frederick City Hospital on Monday of dropsy.
