Electricity on the Farm.

E. B. Miner, of Oriskany Falls, N. Y., has solved the problem of progressive farming. He has made a success of kid-glove farming and can now do the hardest work on the premises without a backache. The heavy work on the Miner farm, and most of the lighter work too, is done by electricity while the farmer and his good family stand idly by and watch the wheels go 'round.

There is a little creek running through Mr. Miner's farm, and he has merely put the stream to work and is doing the playing himself. This stream he has harnessed to run a small dynamo, which in turn gives him electric light, heat and power for his home and farm buildings. A small dam of the flow type was built of concrete. The fall is about 6 feet. A small power house was equipped with a water wheel and a 250 volt generator. The electricity is carried to the house and barn by cables.

At the spacious farm house electricity lights all the rooms, heats a number of apartments; runs the sewing maching and will also be used to cook the food. The cream is separated by electricity and the heavy barrel churn is run by the same power. A small motor drives the buzz saws, the grindstone, the feed-cutters, the fanning mill and pumps the water.

The cost of the plant was trifling considering what it does. It runs night and day and requires practically no attention further than oiling twice a week.

There are doubtless hundreds of other places throughout the country where small water power could be utilized and a similiar plant installed.

Colds and Breathing.

A physician is quoted in the Philadelphia 'Record' as saying: 'If you'd only realize that deep breathing is a perfectly successful substitute for an overcoat in an emergency, the chances are ten to one that you wouldn't have got chilled. About this time of the year, colds are frequent because people get caught just as you did and can't think of any way to keep warm except running a race or getting up a brisk fight with some one, which isn't always convenient. In such a case, deep breathing is the best substitute for an overcoat there is. I was going up-State by trolley the other day minus an overcoat, because it didn't seem cold and the closed cars were on. After a time I struck a line which was still running open cars, and it wasn't many minutes before I was wishing good and hard for warmer clothes. Instead of sitting there and absorbing a cold, however, which I'll wager most of the few people on the car did, I simply began to take long, deep breaths. When I got off the car, instead of being stiff from cold, I was warm and comfortable from the extra oxygen I'd drawn into my lungs, combined with the extra physical exertion involved.'

The Rule of Three.

Three things to govern—temper, tongue and conduct.

Three things to love—courage, gentleness and affection.

Three things to hate—cruelty, arrogance, and ingratitude.

Three things to delight in—frankness, freedom and beauty.

Three things to wish for—health, friends and a cheerful spirit.

Three things to avoid—idleness, loquacity and flippant jesting.

Three things to fight for—honor, country and home.

Three things to admire—intellectual power, dignity and gracefulness.

Three things to think about—life, death and eternity.

There is a good deal of apparent poverty that needs your time more than your dime.

FOREVER.

Those who love truly never die,
Tho' year by year the sad memorial wreath,
A ring and flowers, types of life and death,
Are laid upon their graves.

For death the pure life saves,
And life all pure is love; and love can reach
From heaven to earth, and nobler lessons teach
Than those by moral read.

Well blest is he who has a dear one dead:
A friend he has whose face will never change—
A dear companion that will not grow strange:
The anchor of love is death.

The blessed sweetness of a loving breath
Will reach our cheeks all fresh thro' weary years;
For her who died long since, ah! waste not tears,
She's thine unto the end.

Thank God for one dear friend,
With face still radiant with the light of truth,
Whose love comes laden with the scent of youth,
Thro' twenty years of death.

—John Boyle O'Reilly.

A MISSIONARY SOCIABLE.

To keep up interest in their monthly missionary meetings, the women of a Western church devised the following clever plan:

The names of the ladies in the congregation were arranged alphabetically and then divided into groups of six or eight. All the A's and B's were required to form the first group, and a committee was appointed to arrange a literary program for each meeting.

The public announcement read:

'The Women's Missionary Society will give an A and B Missionary Tea at the home of Mrs. T—— from 3 to 5.30, on ——. An A and B program will be rendered, and A and B refreshments served. Ten cents will be charged. All are invited.'

The refreshments consisted of thin bread and butter, vealloaf, baked apples, bouillon and water. Tables were arranged in the dining-room and prettily decorated with plants and flowers. There were menu cards cut in the form of capital letters—some A and some B, on the straight or left side of which were the words, 'Banqueting Bill,' while the other side read: 'Baby Beef, Amalgamated Baked Apples, Bisected Bread, Bountifully Buttered; Beverages: Adam's Ale, Bouillon.'

The program consisted of papers on Alaska, Africa and Bulgaria, and some music, and the reading of items of missionary news; a recitation by the daughter of one of the B's, and a song by the daughter of the hostess.

The C's were more numerous, and their afternoon came in November, when the rooms were decorated with chrysanthemums, and cake, coffee and chocolate were served in the simplest fashion. The program was made up of interesting information concerning China and the Chinese, and was of the best of the series.

At the December meeting the D's, assisted by the E's and F's, described the deaconess work.

Another delightful afternoon was the tiffin given by the H's and I's. The hostesses were dressed in some of the costumes peculiar to India, and much information relating to India and its people was gained by those present.

The J's devoted themselves to Japan—finding it easy to make their afternoon an elaborate affair.

The refreshments served were sometimes elaborate, but usually very simple. There was little attempt at style, the object being simply to disseminate missionary information.—Mrs. W. W. Morse, in 'Ladies' Home Journal.

Poetic Plea for more Pay.

From the New York Tribune.

The Jersey City schoolteachers have adopted a novel plan to plead for an increase of pay. Each of the directors of education received recently a copy of the following:

The firm increased his salary two years ago last May,
The said increase amounting to
just 30 cents a day,
Of sugar, salt and rice.
Since then they've raised the price,
Of carrots and of beets,
Of flour, meal and meats,
Of baby's little boots,
of taters, milk and cheese,
Of products of the bees,
Of hats and sacks and coats,
Of all that sinks or floats.
He's paying out the money that he saved before the raise,
But Prosperity's upon us and his heart is full of praise.

Corn Shrinkage.

From the results of several trials at different experiment stations it appears that the shrinkage of grain put into the bin in good condition is very slight, and corn put into the crib in the fall fairly well cured and dried will not lose over 10 per cent in weight during the four or five winter months, the shrinkage usually being much less proportionately than the rise in price; also, as sold in the fall, 10 to 15 per cent greater weight per bushel of ear corn is required by dealers than is required in the winter or spring.—Kansas Farmer.

Lawyer—Well, I've got you off somehow or other. You are free.

Thief—Many thanks. I'll come and see you sometime.

Lawyer—Well, but not at night time.

BELL TELEPHONES.

President Frederick P. Fish in the annual report of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, which has just been issued, shows that the Bell Telephone Companies had a total of 3,068,833 telephone stations in the United States at the end of the year 1906 as against 2,528,715 stations at the close of 1905. There were in use, for exchange and toll service, 7,468,905 miles of wire, of which 1,688,937 miles were added during the year, these figures not including the mileage of wire operated by sublicense companies. In 1906 the Bell Companies handled a daily average of 16,940,000 connections, or at the rate of about 5,455,000,000 per year, being 64 telephone calls for each man, woman and child in the United States. There was expended by the Bell Companies in the Unites States for new construction, including exchanges, toll lines, land and buildings, $79,366,949, as against $50,780,906, in 1905.

The grand total of expenditures upon the properties during the seven years beginning with 1900 has been $298,914,255.

During the year the Bell Companies in the United States offset the depreciation which would otherwise have taken place in the value of the lines and equipment by expending $32,814,568 for maintenance and renewal of plant. This expenditure was independent of that for new construction. It was made from the earnings of the properties and was charged to expenses. The report states that as a result of this expenditure the plant is in a better condition than ever before and could not now be reproduced for less than $70,000,000 in excess of its cost. Year by year the plant is becoming of a more permanent character, and nearly all of it now is of a type which need not be replaced until it is worn out. Throughout the country the business of the Bell Companies is supported by a satisfactory plant, a good organization and good service.

President Fish devotes a portion of the report to a statement of the way in which the growth of the system is being provided for. He says that in the earlier stages of the system's development it seemed consistent with sound policy to assume a rate of growth not greatly in excess of that then prevailing, but if, under present conditions, buildings were erected and central office equipment installed sufficient only for the business in sight at the time, it would not be long before they became inadequate. In many cases they could be enlarged only at at an expense altogether out of proportion to the increased facilities gained. The same is true even to a greater extent of the line construction which connects the exchange with the subscribers' stations. For these reasons the Bell Companies, particularly in the last year, have built for the future as far as was consistent with sound economy. They have provided for growth that is sure to come and have not limited their construction to the business actually in sight. In line with this policy is the increased use of cables upon pole lines, made possible by improvements in the cables and securing increased capacity, lessened interruption of service and decreased maintenance expense. The extent to which the Companies have thus built for the future is shown by the fact that $25,000,000 are now invested in circuits in cable that are not yet in use but all of which will soon be in service. The report points out that adequate provision for the future is made possible by systematic engineering and that engineering of the kind now characterizing the work is of great assistance to the Companies in meeting promptly and satisfactorily the demand for good service.

In recounting the financial operations of the year, the report says that the gross revenue of all the Bell Companies in the United States, taken as a whole, and excluding duplications, was over $114,000,000. These figures do not include the revenues of the Bell Company of Canada or the Western Electric Company. In spite of the abnormal financial conditions, which involved unusual interest charges, the very great investment in construction, much of which did not become revenue producing during the year, and the high cost of labor and material, the net returns from the business as a whole were not reduced, although there was not the increase which would have been made if the conditions had been more nearly normal. All things considered, the financial results were satisfactory, and it is believed they will be substantially better in 1907 than in 1906.

Couldn't Supply It.

'I see you advertise everything for the baby?' said the man entering the child's bazar.

'Yes, this is the place,' said the floor-walker. 'What do you want to get?'

'Well, what I want to get is something that will get out of a warm bed on a cold night and walk the floor.'

It's better to smile at nothing than to frown at everything.
