JES' PLAIN TORPEDOES.

The good old Fourth's a-comin', he best day in the year,
And little chaps get anxious-like when once it's drawin' near;
They talk of fire crackers and they dream about the noise,
The dear old Fourth was certainly jes' made fer little boys.
Bill's got a great big cannon, with fuse you have to light,
And lots of great big crackers that's filled with dynamite;
But I'm a little feller—ain't half as old as he—
And I guess that plain torpedoes will have to do fer me!

Pa says that giant crackers ain't fit for little chaps,
He's sore on all toy pistols and hates these paper caps,
He don't intend his children shall ever celebrate
By blowin' off their fingers—he says they'll have to wait.
"You're nothin' but a baby," my father says, "as yet,
And your daddy can't quite spare you; he needs you bad, you bet.
Bill's got some giant crackers? Well, that I know is true,
But I guess that plain torpedoes will have to do fer you."

It's hard to have big brothers and watch them at their play
And jes' to be a little chap and sort o' in the way;
To have folks always tell you you can't do thus and so
Because you're jes' a little chap—not old enough, you know.
But ma, she sees I'm tearful, so she takes me in her lap
And says: "Why, what's the matter? You're crying', little chap."
Then, as she bends to kiss me, I'm brave as I can be.
I guess that plain torpedoes are good enough for me!

—Louis E. Thayer in Woman's Home Companion.

FOURTH OF JULY AT HENLEY.

An American Girl's Attempt to Celebrate In England.

NORAH GRIDLEY in the New York Press gives an amusing account of an attempt she once made to celebrate the Fourth of July in England in the face of the advice of her friends to 'do in Rome as the Romans do' and forget the Declaration of Independence. Deserted by the less American members of her party, she purchased patriotic paraphernalia in London and set out for Henley, where on that day the famous international regatta was at its height.

'Upon the arrival of the train at Henley,' she says, 'I found a boat which exactly suited my purpose and was fortunate in securing the services of an Irish boatman of the most obliging nature. I told him of my plans. He was delighted and vowed eternal loyalty.

'I stepped aboard and was rowed to a secluded spot, where we began operations, Mike entering into the spirit of the affair with hilarious excitement. The river was fast filling with gayly decorated craft; the air was full of music, and the races had begun. English versus Canadian, near neighbors to the 'land of the free and the home of the brave,' and methought that among the Maple Leaf crew or their friends I might find at least some one who would appreciate if not applaud my effort.

'The sides of the boat were draped with the national colors; from the stern a pennant of red, white and blue streamed. Fastened to the prow, America's proud banner floated, royal emblems of her greatness and power. Old Glory rose and fell with undulating sweeps, and Mike grew dizzy with enthusiasm. Rising from his seat and flourishing the oar, looking a very ancient sea god, his voice rang out clear and strong:

"Hooray for the stars and stripes!
Old England gives me the gripes."

'Wrapped in the starry emblem, I gazed with calm indifference and idly floated along, the cynosure of all eyes. Spying a particularly elegant boat, in which were several English ladies and gentlemen, I ordered Mike to row alongside, pulling steadily and surely, and 'to give not an inch.' The hour of my triumph was at hand; the men grasped the side of their boat and with fixed gaze silently viewed the curious and unusual appairtion. The ladies adjusted their glasses and looked long and scrutinizingly. Leaning forward on her seat, a stately maiden addressed her companion and said, 'Aw, weally, how owiginal—a new and unique advertisement for somebody's soap!'

'With a majestic and solemn gesture Mike was mutely commanded to take me ashore.'

A Naive Prayer.

Just before the indecisive battle of Monmouth in the Revolutionary war a brigade chaplain in Washington's army is said to have offered up this unique prayer:

"O Lord of Hosts, lead forth thy servants of the American army to battle and give them the victory; or, if this be not according to thy sovereign will, then we pray thee stand neutral and let flesh and blood decide the issue."—Harper's Weekly.

The Largest American Flag.

To hang in the great court of the postoffice department in Washington a flag will soon be made which it is believed will be the largest in the world. It will be sixty feet long by about thirty-five feet wide. The thirteen red and white stripes will be nearly three feet wide each. The cost will be $200.

The family tree of the grafter is a plum tree.

The Declaration.

History of the Immortal Document Which Made Us Free.

What has happened to the Declaration of Independence since its signing is recounted by William H. Michael, formerly of the state department at Washington. In 1789 congress authorized 'the secretary for the department of foreign affairs' to take charge of it, along with other records, books and papers of the Continental congress. The same year the department of foreign affairs became the department of state, which has, to all intents and purposes, remained the depository of the Declaration ever since. The great document was from 1841 to 1877, however, deposited in the patent office, for many years a bureau of the department of state, and was allowed to remain there after the patent office was placed under the interior deportment, the old department of state not being fireproof, while the patent office building was believed to be so. After the present fireproof state, war and navy building was finished the Declaration was returned to its legal depository.

Until 1894 the Declaration was framed and displayed in a steel cabinet in the library of the department of state, where all visitors might see it, but in that year it was hermetically sealed in a frame and placed in a drawer of another steel cabinet constructed to protect also the original signed copy of the constitution. Here the Declaration still remains, locked and sealed by order of the late Secretary Hay, and it is no longer shown to any one, except by special direction of the state department.—New York Times.

The Declaration at Ticonderoga.

At Ticonderoga, N. Y., the Declaration of Independence was proclaimed to the portion of the army stationed there. Says a contemporaneous writer: "On Sunday, July 28, 1776, immediately after divine worship, the Declaration of Independence was read by Colonel St. Clair, and having said, 'God save the free and independent states of America,' the army manifested their joy with three cheers. 'It was remarkably pleasant, adds the narrator, 'to see the spirits of the soldiers so raised after all their calamities. The language of every man's countenance was, 'Now we are a people; we have a name among the states of this world.'

Criticism, like charity, should begin at home.

Homemade Fireworks.

Now is the time of year when the small boy "sooner" insists that the Fourth of July comes on any day between June 26th and July 5th.

So it is he makes all days between inclusive strident with sputtering and detonations and murky with the fumes of burned gunpowder, culminating in a nerve racing, rear bursting, finger blistering, lawn singeing, house burning orgy of sounds, smells, smarts and conflagrations July 4th.

It being apparent to the writer that the desire of the small boy is for smell and sound, he (the writer) hereby gives a recipe for making homemade fire-crackers at home. These will combine a sound, smell and also safety.

Take a pound of macaroni, cut into pieces three inches long, thread the hollow part with cord soaked in kerosene to form fuse, and your homemade safety firecrackers are ready to be loaded.

Take the first piece of macaroni you intend to load and hold in an upright position, with one finger at the bottom.

Now force down a small piece of limburger cheese and pack with a lead pencil till it makes a cork at the bottom.

Now take a teaspoonful of gunpowder and pour into a cylinder on top of the limburger cheese at bottom until the gunpowder comes within a fraction of an inch of the top.

Take another small piece of limburger cheese and pack on top of the gunpowder.

You will now have a homemade firecracker made with a macaroni shell, a kerosene soaked cord fuse running through it, gunpowder in the middle and both ends plugged with limburger.

Put away to dry and proceed till you have a sufficient quantity or run out of materials.

It may be well, however, to provide oneself with a permit from the board of health before beginning the celebration of a glorious Fourth with our homemade safety fireworks.—Roy L. McCardell in New York World.

The Fourth at Santiago.

'The Fourth of July, 1898, was really the most spectacular one I ever witnessed,' says Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans in the New York Press.

'We were lying outside Santiago harbor after the sinking of the Spanish fleet on the 3d of July.

'I had been working hard on the 3d and was up all night and had retired about 10 o'clock on the Fourth to get a much needed rest.

'About 11 o'clock my orderly came to my bed and, flashing a bullseye lantern in my face, said:

'Another boat is coming out, sir.'

'That can't be,' I answered.

'Yes, sir. I saw her, sir,' he reiterated.

'By the time I reached the deck the Texas and Massachusetts, on watch, had their searchlights upon her, and we read plainly Reina Mercedes. And then began the first battle in the history of the world by searchlight.

'The Texas opened up her twelve inch guns, and the first shot struck the Reina Mercedes broadside. Then followed a fusillade from the Massachusetts, while the whole fleet moved up for position in the fray.

'Then the shore batteries and forts opened fire, and shells fell thick and fast about us. For Fourth of July celebration and noise, for excitement, enthusiasm and patriotism, that Fourth of July, 1899, stands out as the most spectacular one in my experience.'

Fourth of July Proverbs.

Accidents will happen in the best regulated fire works.

American Flag No Toy.

Under no circumstances is the American flag to be regarded as a toy, according to the board of United States general appraisers. The board decided on Jan. 31 last that Takito & Co. of Chicago and other Japanese importers cannot bring in the stars and stripes under the toy schedule of the Dingley tariff.

The flags in the test case were made of silk and were not over an inch and one-half in length. The collector of customs at Chicago exacted duty on the flags at the rate of 50 per cent advalorem under the provision of the tariff for 'manufacture of silk.' The importers asserted that the flags should be admitted at 35 per cent as toys.

In his decision General Appraiser Sharretts says, 'We do not think that the American flag, however diminutive, is commercially, commonly or nationally regarded as a plaything for children, and we find that the flags in dispute are not toys.'

The Fourth On The Wabash.

'Back on the banks of the Wabash when I was a boy,' says Uncle Joe Cannon in the Milwaukee Sentinel, 'the Fourth of July was celebrated by milking the cows, hoeing corn and weeding the vegetable garden.

'If we were in luck we got a chance to steal off and go fishing.

'The Fourth of those old days is now only a memory. I prefer the Fourth of this modern, wonderful, plenteous, rich and inventive twentieth century, when for a few pennies the modern boy can buy novelties in fireworks, skillful concoctions of chemicals and more or less harmless noise makers to delight the boyish heart such as boys on the old pioneer farms in early Illinois never dreamed existed outside the 'Arabian Nights' tales.'

'Is Howard stingy?' 'Is he stingy? Why that man won't even buy a calendar for fear he may not live the year out to use it up.'

CHANGE.

The secret of happiness is constantly changing within the limits of reason and common sense. A rut in the human soul is like a rut in the road, dangerous and upsetting. If we must remain at the same tasks year after year for nearly the whole of a lifetime, then it should be our constant effort to get all the variety we can into our lives in other ways. The fact that farmers' wives go insane more than any other class of persons is attributed to the terrible monotony of their lives, which are one unceasing round of hard work. A machine bearing on a single point of metal wears out that point speedily. It is precisely the same with our lives. One dull round of thought, doing the same tasks at the same hour year after year, will break down the finest, strongest brain.

So get out and have a vacation. At least give yourself a vacation of thought. Read new things; walk along fresh roads; look at new pictures and new buildings. Invite fresh new thought always to your soul; so shall you keep always young. Be not so sure that your fondest theory is exactly the correct one. Standing still is decay and death. Hold the same plow handle, bend over the same desk for forty years, with your thoughts chained down to them, and you become a humped shouldered old hunks—blind, deaf, weak and disagreeable.

Keep up with the wagon. Change your old views and habits for new and better ones when you find them, and be always on the lookout for them.

Pyrotechnicology.

'They're off in a bunch,' said the sporty red light as he saw a little fellow light a pack of firecrackers at once.

'It's all up with us!' said the skyrockets as they went whizzing into the air.

'Go chasey ourself said the pistol to the nigger chaser.

'One good turn deserves another,' chirped the pinwheel.

'You carry a big wad with you,' smilingly spoke the giant firecracker to the old musket.

'I can't kick,' rejoined the broken musket.

'I don't care much for that roman candle. He's too sporty. He's got too many high balls in him,' said another.

'He's no match for me,' whistled the piece of punk as he noticed the boy hopelessly searching through his pockets for a sulphur stick.

'You're full of hot air,' slangily said some one to the balloon.—Sunday Magazine.

The Star Spangled Banner.

Admiral Dewey told the story of the adoption of 'The Star Spangled Banner' as the national anthem at a meeting of the Francis Scott Key Memorial association in Washington last March. He said he was instrumental in its adoption by this government, saying that once, while he was abroad and was dining with Prince Henry of Prussia on the latter's flagship, the band played 'Hail, Columbia.' He called the prince's attention to the fact that it was not a national anthem and referred to 'The Star Spangled Banner.'

Later he and Justice Moody, then secretary of the navy, discussed the incident, the result of which was the issuance of the president's order designating 'The Star Spangled Banner' as the recognized national anthem of this government.

Looking for Revolutionary Relics.

A tradition still survives in Luzerne county, Pa., that when General John Sullivan marched through that region in 1779 on his expedition against the Indian confederacy of central New York he buried some superfluous brass cannon along the Wilkesbarre mountain. To search for these Revolutionary relics a number of the best known citizens of Ashley, Pa., have formed themselves into a historical society.

Jefferson on the Monroe Doctrine.

The day is not distant when we may formally require a meridian of partition through the ocean which separates the two hemispheres, on the hither side of which no European gun shall ever be heard, nor an American on the other, and when, during the rage of the eternal wars of Europe, the lion and the lamb, within our regions, shall lie down together in peace.—Thomas Jefferson.
