SIDE TWO

Monday Evg

A fine warm clear day has cheered up everyone in this part of the world. I find however the atmosphere of the house is rather dark and boisterous. This morng Mrs Morris told me she should be obliged to get rid of the two Misses Pemberton as she wants the rooms they occupy for herself & her sisters. She said before I took rooms that she wished to get rid of one of them. & this morng she expressed herself very freely and said one of them was offensive because he stayed out sometimes till 5 o'clock in the morng. & asked if I thought this was right. of course I answered I did not. She evng to tell me that she had dismissed these gentlemen & that they are void of any interference. and I was obliged to hear one of the sisters state her grievances to some of the other boarders in the front parlour & find the two young women. We think the elder does not consult their mother enough who is one easy to read and light to hold in the hand. I took tea in 8th street. Oh how refreshing it was to find dear Israel with his whole heart later up with his Sunday School & Dr Stevens sermons. God's holy name be praised for his mercies which endure for ever! Dear little Effie was telling me about Joseph & his coat. and turned to her father to say. What was the name of the land they sold him to? and what was the Captains name that bought him? My heart swells with emotion as I only recal. the scene. simple enough. it is true. no excitement nor effort - but natural and easy as all God's work. Let us even pray that the Spirit may be poured out then in larger measure till they come to the heavenly kingdom.
