Mrs. Caspar Morrill
West River.
Maryland.

SIDE TWO

and Effie got an air cushion, so she got along quite comfortably. I think she really enjoyed the ride in the boat as we had such pleasant company. The Doctor and all of them thought she was better. On Thursday afternoon Father, Annie and I went to Atlantic City, but most unfortunately there was a change in the weather that very afternoon, though it was very warm when we left home. When we got there it was, to use Aunt Mary's expression "like spring winter". Still it seemed in some respects to suit Annie, for she coughed much less frequently, and had no expectoration till the Saturday afternoon when the cough was rather loose. But the keen air brought on bad headache and on Friday morning she had a chill, followed by fever in the afternoon. So, we concluded to come up with Aunt M. & the rest on Saturday afternoon (yesterday). Today Annie seems right bright, though tired, of course. Our present plan is to go for a few days to Fred, and the beginning of next week to follow Aunt M. & Fan who expect to start for Nancy next Saturday. Aunt H. will go with us and probably Ellie will escort us. Fan is much better and they are much encouraged about her. We live next door and have invited us in to tea, which invitation is accepted unless it rains. Now, dear Mrs. Morrill, I have given a full account of ourselves without one word of thanks to you for all your kindness to us. And yet I am sure that both you & Mary