My Dear Wife

Harry's telegram which I found on my table when I came in to dinner was heartily welcome when I learned its contents. I had followed you in thought into the Severn & then into West River with a heavy sea & adverse & then thought of how uncomfortable it must be upon your road through the snow to Annapolis. It blew moderately & poured in torrents just at the periods for these points to be reached. Your nice little note by Dear Galloway has been about ten time last evening. I had been very much pressed during the day having had the Evening

Jennie on sale most satisfactorily & successfully
