SIDE ONE

Philadelphia August 18th 1848.

Dear Don Carpando.

~~Hot, Hot, Hot~~ it is ~~it~~ in Philadelphia and ~~not~~ much to do except to eat peaches & keep generally Cool. I have seen this morning also your patients & my own (four in number) and am now ready to settle Cox thoughts by you, as nothing trivial can come from such a temperature. The ~~most~~ interesting case is that of Mrs Wolles. She is as you left her, nothing but a long face, & the other real pain in her side. I think she misses the petting of her D. as I am disposed to give but little & imitates me like a lynx. I do not think I go out or in but what she knows it & always something to inquire. I am convinced that ~~you~~ one can live too near to patients. I have tried a number of remedies but the same report attends them & you will not lose any credit by my exertions. The fact is the pain in her side is interior & there is nothing to be done with physic. Most of the list you left have been cured up, the prettiest cases. Dundas' boy. I spent the better part of yesterday morning in the garden with Mrs D.
