Passing of the Parlor Stove.

(Washington Herald)

"All modern improvements" is the sign attached to every up-to-date apartment nowadays, and there are some advantages in these new-fangled notions that everybody demands, yet there is a pathetic side connected with this desire for conveniences and luxuries in the homes of today.

Rural or urban life has lost many of the characteristics of former decades, when visits, whether social or business, played a larger part in the life of the citizen than they do today. When a caller came to the house, he was first offered refreshments, and was then invited into the parlor or sitting-room, where of a winter afternoon or evening a bright fire was burning in the stove or grate. This fire was the center of the home sociability. From it radiated the warmth of the welcome; about it gathered host and guest; its bright blaze symbolized the sparkle of the conversation; its mellow glow typified the reflective moments, and its dying embers marked the hour of departure.

Such a picture can be seen in too few homes of today. Here and there is a fireplace, but the habits of the present generation are such as to preclude any possibility. Calls, even when informal, are usually matter-of-fact.

Rules for Air Navigation.

Paris, May 7.—A scheme for the regulation of aerial traffic has been submitted by the Aero Club to the minister of public works.

As regards the control of aerial craft, the following rules have been drafted.

The pilot of a heavier-than-air vessel or aeroplane must give way to dirigibles.

Two airships passing one another must each keep to the right, after the rule which governs the circulation of street traffic on the Continent. If the pilot of an airship perceives another vessel coming toward him on the right and in the same atmospheric plane, he must rise at least 50 yards above the approaching vessel.

An airship about to overtake another vessel must previously give a warning note, and then pass 50 yards to the right of and 50 yards above the vessel.

When an aviator perceives a town he must avoid it, unless he be specially authorized by the municipality to fly above it.

All vessels are to bear their license number printed in large characters, and also the name and address of the owners.

Preparations for an airship service between Berlin and Duesseldorf have made such progress that it will be started this year.

When Speech was Golden.

The late David Simpson, who for the greater part of his life, occupied a position of reponsibility and trust with the firm of Armour & Co., owed his good fortune to the fact that in his boyhood he possessed the full allowance of a aplomb and independence supposed to be the birthright of young America.

One morning Mr. P. D. Armour, seated at his desk, received at the hands of a messenger boy, a telegram of unusual importance, and, after reading it over the second time, sat with knitted brows, absorbed in thought and oblivious of the waiting Mercury. The silence finally was broken by an imperious young voice which said:

"Come, sign this book My time is money."

Turning the millioniare saw at his elbow a small, rosy-cheeked boy who held out the book, pointing with insistent finger to the spot waiting for the recipient's name.

"Well," said Mr. Armour, looking him over approvingly, "I shouldn't wonder if we could use a boy of your stamp. What wages are you getting now?"

"Twenty-three dollars a month," was the reply.

"I will give you twenty-five."

"Done," said the small boy promptly, and the next morning he reported bright and early, and began his daily round of duties.

However, the exuberant spirits of youth dominated him at times, and, having one day overstepped the bounds of prudence he was discharged. Meekly the lad took his leave, but the next morning he was back again as usual.

"Hello!" said the head of the firm as he passed the department in which "Dave," was at work. "I thought you had been dismissed."

"And so I was, Mr. Armour,' was the reply, "but I have thought it all over and I find that I cannot leave you for two reasons."

"And what are your reasons?"

"One is that I can't afford to give up so good a boss as you are, and the second that you can't afford to lose so good a boy as I am."

His employer laughed and passed on—and "Dave" was a fixture for life.

Kept Pledge in a New Way.

Magistrate Carey found a new form of intoxication one day last week when a prisoner was arraigned before him at the Third and De Lancey street police station on the charge of being drunk and disorderly.

When the prisoner gave his name as Bill McCarthy and residing in the neighborhood of Front and Spruce streets the magistrate recognized him immediately and said: "Well, you are here again, Bill; I didn't expect you would keep the pledge which you took only a week ago, so I will send you up the river this time.'

"Judge, your honor, you are mistaken," quickly replied McCarthy. "I took the pledge to abstain from drinking intoxicating liquors for a period of two years and will swear that I did not drink a drop from that time until this moment, and furthermore, I intend to stick to that pledge."

"What!" shouted the magistrate, "do you mean to stand there and tell this court that you have not been drinking? You are not sobered up now after spending the night in the cell, and from appearances you had a grand time."

McCarthy again spoke up and flatly denied drinking.

"It was this way," he said. "I made some ice-cream, and not having anything to flavor it with, remembered where I had a bottle of brandy hidden away in my closet for medical purposes and poured the contents of the bottle into the cream. After it was frozen I moulded the cream into blocks and ate it. It was so good that I believe I ate too much; but remember, I kept the pledge."—Philadelphia Times.

A Million for Bibles.

In his address before the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South at Asheville, N. C., Dr. Haven, of the American Bible Society, announced that a gift by Mrs. Sage of a half-million dollars, conditioned upon the society raising an equal amount, had been made good by the society meeting the conditions. Thus a million dollars has been created for the society that has frequently received liberal gifts for the work of making the Bible the best-circulated book of the ages.

No romance begins to equal that of the dissemination of the Holy Scriptures. Literally from Greenland's icy mountains to India's coral strand the world of divine truth is carried through ne avenue or another, suggesting the eaves of the tree of life in the vision of the hereafter that shall be for the healing of the nations. Some wonderful men have entered into the work of spreading the bible abroad, and among these a man of rare literary pre-eminence—Barrow—made his "Bible in Spain" a classic of the English language.

Mrs. Sage has placed half a million of dollars where the returns will be as the bread cast upon the waters that comes back after many days. The very possibilities of such generosity stimulate the imagination of the fortunate donors, for when such an enterprise is entered upon as that of adding to the stupendous popularity of the Bible it may well be said that no one can tell of the myriad volumes which shall prosper, this or that.—Baltimore American.

Great Field of Charity.

(Cincinnati Enquirer.)

We have reached a point now where hundreds of millions are being put into every form of gift which can be thought of for the public advantage, and it is fortunate that there should be such a variety of objects available to meet every one's taste or conviction as to what is most desirable and useful. One puts up an art building or a library, another a hospital or a college dormitory or a chapel, another lays out a park or endows a professorship or an old people's home. Trips into the country are provided for children in the summer and sanitariums for all sorts of diseases. Vast sums are to be given to learn the origin and nature of scourges like tuberculosis, cancer and the hookworm. The latest form of endowment is for purposes of original investigation in many directions, which up to a very recent date, have been carried on by busy professional men. Now experts are able to give all their time and ability to hunting down the secret of life, prying into all the arcana of nature and studying history and civilization at their sources. Within a short time $4,000,000 has been set apart by a rich New Yorker to provide a home for convalescents and to assist persons out of employment on account of illness, an excellent provisional, for which there is need in every large place. To stimulate research tempting prizes are offered. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars awaits the person who discovers a remedy for tuberculosis.

Thought for Sunday.

(Ohio State Journal.)

That is a very expressive incident in the Bible where Moses is in the cleft of the rock, to see God as he passed by; but he didn't see Him; didn't see His face—that was impossible, impossible for matter to see spirit; but he saw His back—after God passed by. Rather a silly idea people some times think but it is a good one when one sees the meaning of it.

A man comes into a community, and in a year or two some beautiful streets, fine buildings, busy factories, works of art follow his coming. One wonders what causes it all. It is only his will, which one cannot see, but he can see what he has done, he can see the beauty, grace, comfort that he has left behind him, all the effect of his purpose and his will, which are the things of the spirit, which is always invisible. That is why Moses didn't see God's face but he saw him right after He passed by. He saw him in the skies, the fields, the rivers, the winds, the flowers, the kindness, the justice, the aspirations of men. These were his pack which could be easily seen; but the face, which is the infinite spirit, neither Moses nor anybody else ever saw. And so one can see him all the time, as Moses saw him from the cleft. In the things his spirit wrought, the beauty, the sublimity, the joy which exalts the day and glorifies the night.

EVER WATCHFUL.

A Little Care Will Save Many Westminster Readers Future Trouble.

Watch the kidney secretions.
See that they have the amber hue of health;
The discharges not excessive or infrequent;
Contain no "brick-dust like" sediment.
Doans Kidney Pills will do this for you.
They watch the kidneys and cure them when they're sick.

Peyton Brown, Union Bridge, Md., says: "For fifteen years I was afflicted with kidney trouble. My back was lame and painful and ached so severely at night that I could not obtain my proper rest. I often felt languid and nervious and was bothered by dizzy spells. The kidney secretion contained sediment and their frequency in passage was a source of much annoyance. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me in two weeks and I have taken them since then with great benefit. I take pleasure in giving his remedy my endorsement."

Walking.

(Philadelphia Press.)

With no intention to disparage the delights of the bicycle or the motor car, there can be no doubt that they, or before their advent the constant use of the horse carriage, have had a tendency to wean a man away from the employment of his legs. Therein lies a beautiful compensation for the man of no or slender means. He develops his muscles and increases his powers of endurance by walking; he, when allowed an outing, notes nature with a leisurely eye. The man on wheels may experience intense delight in his exhilarating flight through the same landscape though, while even this is questionable, it is certain that lolling back in his tonneau, he is growing older and more flabby than his brother afoot.

And what shall it be presently when indolent folk are soaring and darting in the upper air? We cannot say that these have lost their nerves. They distinctly have not. It takes more nerve than perhaps Weston possesses to move as a bird does or race madly as does Barney Oldfield. But aren't they losing the use of their legs?

A Disciplinary Vote.

John I. Fay, a well-known lawyer of Ohio, claims to be the only man in the United States who was unanimously indorsed for an office by all parties and defeated.

Fay lived in a suburb of Columbus and was nominated for mayor. He was indorsed by both parties. It fell out that he had business in Cincinnati on election day, and he went there without stopping to vote.

The farmers began to come in. They all asked for Fay. No one knew where he was. "This is a fine mess," said one of them. "Here we are voting for a man who hasn't enough interest in the job to be on hand."

"Let's put up a man of our own," said another.

They held a convention, nominated another man and voted for him, too. Fay came back about five o'clock. He voted for himself and complacently waited for the votes to be counted. When they were counted it was discovered that Fay was beaten by eight votes.

When Her Faith Failed Her.

During the progress of a big "protracted meeting" for which the South is famous, an ardent sister of the church, who usually came in an old fashioned buckboard drawn by the family horse, was late for a particularly important service and was being severely censured by the pastor. Explaining the reason for being late the good sister said that the horse had taken fright at a passing train and bolted, and that the wreck of the rig had prevented her from being on time.

"My dear sister such little things should not make you late for divine services. You should trust in the Lord."

"Well, brother," she replied, and there was a look of calm peacefulness on her face, "I did trust in the Lord till the bellyband busted and then I had to jump,"—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

An Easy Vermont Mother.

The native thrift of the Vermonters was under discussion and a story was told that was held to illustrate it perfectly. There was a man in one of the interior Vermont towns who had an old horse, ringboned, spavined, with the heaves and every other horse ailment almost—mere shadow of horse. He used to drive the horse to town every day and was jeered by his neighbors for using such a miserable beast.

One day he walked in to the store at the corners. "Where's your horse, Jim?' a friend asked.

"Sold him."

"Sold him! How much did you get?"

"Got a hundred dollars for him.'

"A hundred dollars? Who in thunder did you sell that horse to for a hundred dollars?"

"Why," replied the Vermonter, as he exhibited a roll of bills, "I sold him to mother."

No Chance at All.

When M. G. Scheitlin, now the "feature" man on the Chicago Record-Herald, was working as a reporter in St. Louis, he was sent one night to get the story of the suicide of a Polish girl.

Scheitlin found the house filled with neighbors, who were holding a hilarious wake. The master of ceremonies was the girl's brother. He seemed rather proud of the distinction brought on his house by his sister's act. The brother welcomed the reporter effusively and told him the details. Then he said: "Wouldn't you like to see her?"

The reporter said he would, and the brother elbowed his way through the crowded room, shouting: "Stand back. Make way for the reporter!" The response to his command was not so prompt as he would have liked, and the brother said angrily: "Stand back, I tell you! Make room! You ain't giving the corpse a chance to breathe."

Brevetted for Bravery.

Everytody calls Alfred J. Stofer, a well-known Washington character, "Major" Stofer.

"Where did you get your title,' Stofer?" Representative Littlefield, of Maine, once asked him.

"Earned it, suh," Stofer replied, "killin' Yankees in the war."

"But, Stofer, you were not old enough to be a soldier."

"Who said I was a soldier, suh; who said I was a soldier? I was livin' in my native village of Culpeper, Virginia, suh, in those tryin' times, and it was there I won glory for the sainted Confederate cause and myself by killin' Yankees,"

"But how did you kill them?"

"Killed them by indigestion, suh, by indigestion. I sold em apple pies and killed 'em by scores."

Newfoundland is without reptiles. No snake, frog, toad or lizard has even been seen there.

The longer a man lives the more mistakes he may be counted on to make.
