The Comic Opera Miss Bob White. Standing Room only at Odd Fellows' Hall on Tuesday and Thursday Nights.

We have had Princess Bonnie and Little Tycoon, but the musical treat of this season and in fact within the history of this city, was Miss Bob White, by Willard Spencer, rendered by our home talent on Tuesday and Thursday evening of this week. Little Tycoon was good, Princess Bonnie was better but Miss Bob White is entitled to the prize. We consider it one of Willard Spencers best comic operas.

To do justice to the ladies and gentlemen who took part in it would require more space than we can spare. Everyone acted and sang like veterans. The opera abounds in funny situations and stirring choruses, and the audience which filled Odd Fellows' Hall on both nights enjoyed the performances immensely.

That we have a fine orchestra was fully demonstrated. This organization, composed of gentlemen from different walks of life, should be well supported and encouraged by our citizens. What would we do without it?

Princess Bonnie and The Little Tycoon would not have been thought of and the rendition of Miss Bob White without the Orchestra would have been a dismal failure.

If we only had a proper hall or theater our young people would often entertain us with operas and dramas. As it is certain delightful light operas and dramas are simply impossibilities.

SYNOPSIS OF THE OPERA.

Two millionaires have lost an election bet with the Duke of High Titles and as a penalty are required to become tramps for two months. They arrive at the farm house of a quaker, Farmer Rodd, who works tramps. Miss Livingstone, with whom one of the millionaries is in love, having learned of the election bet, disguises herself and accepts a position as maid in Farmer Rodd's household, assuming the name of Miss Bob White. She makes life miserable for her millionaire tramp friends. The Duke of High Titles and his bashful son follow the tramps to the farm house in order to see the result of the bet. Many complications arise and most amusing incidents take place at the farm house. The situation is aggravated by the presence of the very pretty daughter of Farmer Rodd, with whom Lord Bashful falls in love. But she remains faithful to her sailor lad. At the expiration of the penalty of the bet the millionaires return to their home and all of their friends are invited to a reception including the quaker maidens, the fox hunters, colonial dames, Miss Clare Livingstone and Miss Bob White. The situation becomes very trying to the latter's lover. However, everything ends well as all such affairs ought to do.
