The Effects of Tarred Roads upon Trees and Shrubs.

Ferdand Honore, in Scientific American, August 27th, 1910.

When the first International Road Congress was held in Paris in 1902, M. Forestier, who has charge of the streets of that city, expressed a fear that the tarring of the roads in order to lay the dust would have a deleterious effect upon vegetation. His observations, approved by the German engineers, were met with scepticism by the English and French engineers.

A new Road Congress opened at Brussels on July 30th last, and this time the documents presented by M. Forestier seemed to demonstrate that tarring of the roads, at least in that locality, was essentially deleterious to the trees and shrubs.

The avenue of the Bois de Boulogne is one of the best-known streets in the world. This magnificent avenue, which forms an admirable setting to the stream of the four hundred of Paris upon race days, is almost unique in the world. Its total width is 396.6 feet. The central roadway, 52½ feet wide, which is tarred, is flanked by two 39.3 feet sidewalks, each of which is bordered by bands of turf 10¼ feet wide, planted with flowering plants of the most varied character. This avenue, which was primarily known as the Avenue de l'Imperatrice, was garnished with a collection of all the trees and shrubs acclimated to the latitude of Paris. This collection, which was almost entirely destroyed at the time of the siege, was planted again after the war. Some trees date back about sixty years, while others are forty years of age. All these, up to a short time ago, had a splendid vegetation. During the last few years, however, a considerable number of trees and shrubs have perished. The leaves, more or less shriveled up, covered with brown and pale white spots, and often torn and tattered, appear to be burned and are stopped in their development. This effect is especially noticeable with the lilacs, currants, and deutzia, as well as the maples, the chestnut trees, the catalpas, etc.

As for the herbaceous plants, such as the geraniums and bergonias, these do not blossom any more. At two different places a clump of stonecrop, which was in perfect condition, dried up the day following the tarring of the road and did not become green again during the season.

Imperfect methods of applying the tar might account for the trouble, although the French, with their long experience in this work, should know how best to do it. As far as we can learn, no such damage to vegetation has been recorded in the United States.

If any of our readers know of a case or cases similar to this in the Bois de Boulogne, we shall be glad to hear from them.

NO REASON FOR IT

When Westminster Citizens Show The Certain Way Out.

There can be no reason why any reader of this will continue to suffer the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the dangers of diabetes of any kidney ills when relief is so near at hand and the most positive proof given that they can be cured. Read what a Westminster citizen says:

C. H. Campbell, Main St., Westminster, Md., says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills with highly satisfactory results for an attack of kidney complaint, that had bothered me for at least ten years. My back was weak and a dull pain through my kidneys. My health was much run down and I was steadily growing worse. When I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised,' I procured a box at C. W. Moore's Drug Store. They gave me immediate relief and strengthened my back. I have great faith in Doan's Kidney Pills and take pleasure in recommending them to anyone suffering from kidney complaint."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York sole agents for the United States.

Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other. aug 26 2t

Keene Strong on Language.

James R. Keene, market manipulator par excellence, is a vitriolic, high-tempered man, with a tongue that bites like acid. When he is playing the market he roams up and down his locked inner office like a tiger, growling—sometimes shouting—curses at the ticker. No one but his force of clerks is ever permitted to come near him, and his language at times has been known to wither and blight young men who have left their happy homes to hire out to him. Once, it is said, Keene became chummy with a man who held a good position in society here, and this man tried to reform some of Keene's little ways. "Quit cussing, Jim," said he, "it isn't good form any more."

Keene's reply was illuminated and terse, but his friend kept at him. "And you really ought to join the church, Jim," said he. "It won't do you any harm—and you'll meet a lot of good people there."

Keene recognized the truth of this statement, but had objections to every church that was offered for his consideration. Finally his friend said wearily: "Now, lookee here, Jim. You say you don't like the Methodists and the Baptists, nor the Presbyterians. The only church left is the Episcopal. Will you join that?"

Keene thought for a time. "Dogone it," he said, "I would join that church if it was free and liberal like the other churches."

"Free and liberal?" said his friend in astonishment.

"Yes," said Keene, "I used to know a man who belonged, and he told me that there were only two ways to leave the Episcopal Church. You either have to die or get religion."—Cincinnati Times Star.

What Was Thought of Him.

I once attended a banquet at which one of the guests—an Englishman—drank a little too much sam shu, an exceedingly heady liquid distilled from rice. There were in attendance two half-grown Chinese girls, 14 or 15 years old, one playing the Chinese fiddle, the other the tall Chinese drum. The Englishman, to amuse himself, began making hideous faces at them until he terrified the little creatures into silence. A handsome and dignified Chinese merchant was seated next to me, watching this procedure with an impassive face. The Englishman caught his eye, and said:

"They no sabe me," pointing to the girls. "Thev tink me alle same crazy. Wat you tink?" To which the merchant gravely replied, in perfect English:

"I would not exactly call you crazy, sir, but your mind certainly seems to be somewhat affected."

"The Englishman did not know that the Chinese merchant was a graduate of Yale.—Jerome A. Hart in Bohemian Magazine.

Kimonotomy.

An excited man rushed into the General Hospital in Buffalo and demanded to see his wife, who had come there for an operation that afternoon. He said his name was James Hawkins.

The hospital authorities could remember no operation on a Mrs. Hawkins, and there was no record of such an operation on the books.

"Your wife is not here," they said to Hawkins.

"I know she is," persisted Hawkins.

"But she isn't. We have no Mrs. Hawkins here."

"Where is she, then? She said she was going to the hospital for an operation. I found a note from her when I got home"

"Let me see the note!" demanded the doctor, and when Hawkins handed it to him he read: "Dear Jim: I have gone to have my kimono cut out.

Lizzie."

The man with a level head never got it from butting in.

Influence of Sentiment.

(Charleston News and Courier.)

It is the great crisis in life which test our ability and tempt our strength and often we find ourselves just about to make a decision which we know at heart to be wrong, but which we may be persuaded to regard as right, when some far-away, indistinct influence makes itself felt and points the right way. It is the ties that have bound us to a power for good at some time in our lives which make us feel their strength on occasion.

They may not be very tangible evidences, nothing upon which we can lay our hands and show to the world as the guiding star of life, but their presence is felt none the less, and they continue to exert an influence for good through all the years. Some persons regard such a statement as mere sentiment and scarcely worth consideration, but the world today owes "sentiment" a debt of gratitude for lifting it out of the rut of common-place existence and breathing into the possibilities of a higher, truer living. There is hardly a nature so dead to sentiment that does not at some period in life respond to its appeal. It may be only the remembrance of some words of counsel, or some deed of love, apparently insignificant in themselves, but which in reality stirred unsounded depths of our natures, that left an indelible impression, and which is destined to prove a controlling factor throughout our entire lives.

A Restive Engine.

At the time of the strike of the engineers on the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy road, a considerable number of years ago, the officials of the road dragged in every man they could find who knew anything at all about an engine to take the places of the strikers.

One man they secured was an engineer at a sawmill. All his experience in running an engine had consisted in pulling the lever and starting the log against the saw, and pulling the reverse lever when the plank was cut off, and running the platform back again so the log could be shoved over to allow the saw to take another slice. The yardman gave him an engine and told him to run it into the roundhouse. The sawmill engineer pulled a lever and the engine slid slowly into the roundhouse. When he was in he saw that something must be done, so he pulled the reverse lever. The engine promptly backed out again.

"Here!" shouted the yardman. "What are you doing, you fool? Why don't you put that engine in the roundhouse?"

"I did have her in," yelled the sawmill engineer. "Why in thunder didn't you shut the door."

Filling Frank.

After the war with Spain a party of Americans, including Colonel Hecker, of Detroit, went to Cuba on a tour of inspection. They had with them a negro messenger named Frank.

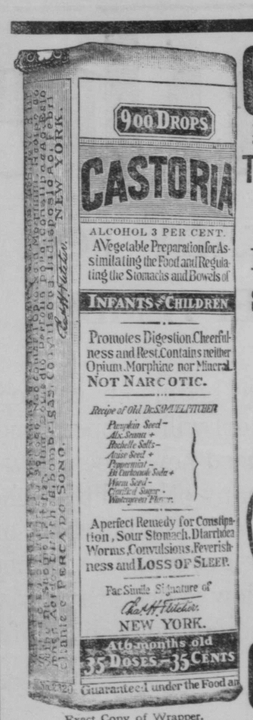

One day Frank got into a place where they sell ices and cakes, on the Prado, in Havana, and bought a plate of ice cream. That was twenty cents.

The waiter handed around some cakes. Frank took a few. The cakes were passed for a second and a third time. On each occasion Frank helped himself liberally.

Then he called for his check. It was one dollar and eighty cents, American. Colonel Hecker and some friends, who were at an adjoining table, heard Frank. "Why didn't you stop me? Doan you know dis yer nigger could eat enough of dis yer stuff to bankrupt the hull Gov'ment?"

The fellow who says it is just as easy to own a house as to pay rent probably never did either.

Of course, marriage improves a man. If you don't believe it ask his wife.
