give to education in both to the pupils, may expect that we were still so far behind foreign institutions in the important matter of Pianoforte teaching and I attach your letter just received from Vienna as confirming what we already know as to Paris. I welcome my remarks for the Principal as well as the pupils and hope we shall improve in this branch at our next term, which opens on 1st October this year instead of September. Our aim – think the new building will be ready by that time. During the past year we have endeavoured to give rather more attention to industrial pursuits as compared with literary. The Needlework, our aim as manufactures considers to be a decided success and we have had as many as 35 girls learning to use the sewing machine – and with satisfactory results.

Still, on contrast with
