SOUTH AS WELL AS NORTH

Ex-President Roosevelt has ended his Southern trip, having shown that what he has to say is as much applauded in the South as in the West. He has drawn the same throngs, there has been the same succession of crowds at the railroad stations; he has had the same applause and he has said the same things to the same popular approval.

Nothing in all this proves that the to deliver is accepted or will be voted precise message Colonel Roosevelt has for in the future. But ex-President Roosevelt's reception, South, West and North, does prove that there is a broad public demand that the national house be set in order, abuses remedied, corporations regulated, and more closely supervised by the Federal authority and the interest of the many more directly followed in legislation and administration.

This demand exists in all sections and among all the various divisions of the American people. These great crowds applaud and approve this demand when it is voiced by Colonel Roosevelt, not because he says it, but because it is in the mind and heart of great multitudes. It is not the man who says these things, but the men who believe them, which make them important, weighty and prophetic of future action by the nation.

This is the fact with which all must reckon, now and in the future. The issue has ceased to be whether there shall be changes in national action, in the extent to which Federal powers are put in motion, the space they cover and the problems they attack. Legislation on corporations, transportation and conservation, East and West, taxation, State and Federal, and drastic laws on corrupt and sinister influences in our public life—these are all sure to come. The stream is moving, the floodgates are open and grinding in the national mill is certain.

The real issue is no longer whether this shall be done—that is settled—but how this shall be done. Whether it shall be accomplished in order, legally, constitutionally, on a settled plan and with judgment for the present, memory of the past and consideration of the future, or whether it shall be done in heat, hap-hazard, with hurrah and haste.

One way or the other, it will be done, and it will be done by the Republican party. The Democratic party, from Woodrow Wilson to William J. Bryan, has no plan to offer and no policy to present. The Republican party has, and it grows clearer and clearer as the days go on that the final decision and ultimate policy will be that which looks to a solution of these problems by sober, sane, careful methods.

No duty is more important at this moment than to secure the election of Republican Congressmen and to establish a sentiment in the Republican party in favor of careful, legal considered constitutional solutions of the issues now plainly before the American people whose existence ex-President Roosevelt's speeches have made visible to all the land.

LABOR AND FOOD PRICES

The French railroad strike, which was sprung so suddenly last week, was based on a demand for a uniform advance in wages and the argument behind the demand was that food prices have been raised so greatly during recent years that the existing wage scale is out of proportion to the cost of living. This reference is merely to direct attention to the fact that the rise in the price of foods is universal and by no means peculiar to the United States. And the cost of living has been raised to a higher level in free-trade England just as in protectionist France.

The attempt, just now, by Democratic newspapers and Democratic orators to make political capital out of the fact that foods have advanced to a higher level since the going out of the last Democratic administration in 1897 entails an enormous amount of shifting and dodging to avoid the plainly apparent conclusions that are so damaging to Democratic pretentions. The last Democratic era—the Cleveland term from 1893 to 1897—was a period when the average price of foods was much lower than it is now. That may be admitted. But it was also an era during which half the farmers of the country were not paying running expenses, but were borrowing money on mortgages and staving off utter ruin while waiting for times to get better; that is, for prices to go up. And not the farming industries alone, but all other branches of business were demoralized and hundreds of thousands of working people were without the steady means to buy food at any price.

The price level, when uniformly adjusted, does not cut much figure. The general average in the cost of living has advanced during the past thirteen years, but so has the general average in the wage scale. But what does count and what has made matters under Republican administration infinitely better than when the Democrats took a hand at tariff making is that under the Republican system the wheels of industry continue to go around, while under the Democratic system they clog and turn with disastrous results to the machinery.

HIGH IDEALS

(Ohio State Journal)

Amiel says in his Journal: "I believe that our higher nature is our truer nature," and that "the highest idea we can conceive of the principle of things will be the truest." That is, thinkup, not down. A man's fate follows his thought. If that is low and mean, so is his life, and so it is, it makes no difference what the outward form may be.

It is one's duty to have high ideals. They are sure to ennoble one's life. They glow in conduct and shine out in enthusiasm, heroism, love, prayer. They make the real man. Every man can make his own life beautiful, just as God made the world beautiful by expressing Himself in it.

This cannot be attained if there is the supremacy of low, material conceits. The greatest psychological fact ever written is that of the Bible: "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." Not in his head, through his logic and reason, but in his heart, where his dreams, his longings, his ideals are. These make the man.

IGNORANT, BUT A WONDER

"A good many years ago—about 1886, to be precise,—said Charles A. Edwards, a former Texan, "we had in Texas a most exciting campaign over the Prohibition question. The people were mightily stirred, and every politician in the state was out on the hustings making speeches on one side or the other. The pro were especially solicitous to capture the colored vote, and they sent to Georgia for a bishop of that race, a graduate of Oberlin, a man of splendid personal presence, great suavity of manner, a most dignified bearing and wonderful eloquence. At home he exercised a commanding influence among the blacks, though he was himself almost light enough of skin to pass for an Anglo-Saxon.

"Well, this bishop from Georgia agreed to come to speak for the Prohibitionists, and at once the antis realized the great effect the stranger might have among the negroes of Texas, who if let alone, would vote almost solidly against prohibition. To counteract his work a very shrewd move was engineered by the chairman of the state anti committee, a renowned Democratic politician, the Hon. Barney Gibbs, former lieutenant governor. Gibbs did nothing but hire the services of an illiterate giant negro by the name of Wade, whose complexion would make a bucket of tar assume a pallid look. Wade had a voice you could hear almost as far as Washington, and though densely ignorant of book lore, he was naturally bright. He also had a faculty of remembering any spoken address. On a single hearing he could recite almost verbatim a speech of two hours in length.

"Sending for this Etheopian curiosity, Barney Gibbs told him he wanted him to meet the Georgia Bishop and reply to him whenever he spoke in Texas. Mr. Gibbs had written out just such a speech as he knew this man could make with maximum effect before negro audiences. Right then and there he got upon the floor and delivered it, and Wade listened with his eyes shut, drank in every word and sentence.

"To cut it short, the Georgia divine came and spoke in Dallas in the presence of a great assemblage. His diction was beautiful, his arguments profound and much applause was his reward on finishing. Then up rose the clumsy, loutish, gorillalike opponent. For a moment or so his awkward efforts, by contrast with the polished utterances of the bishop, were pitiable and the Gibbs crowd were sick at heart. But this was but temporary. In a few minutes Wade got into his stride, and then as his mighty voice rang out with the telling sentences of the speech he had learned by heart the crowd began to listen as if enchanted.

"It was the most remarkable reaction I ever witnessed. The orator simply took the house by storm. On winding up he made a few personal remarks, contrasting his own and the bishops complexion, that threw the hearers into convulsions of laughter. So pointed was the peroration that the bishop declared he would not stay in a state to be publicly insulted, and he left for Georgia that night. Wade's compensation for causing him to flee was a check in four figures.

NEW YORK'S HUMAN SIDE

Brooklyn's Latest Affliction Causes Inhabitants to Weep and Wail. The Subway Blamed.

(From the New York American)

If you should be riding on a trolley car in Brooklyn and the man sitting next to you should suddenly grab at his trousers leg, say something not permissible in polite society and start for the door of a car in a hurry, don't be alarmed. He isn't crazy.

If, when calling on a Flatbush family in the evening you notice that the members seem to be nervous and ill at ease, that they twist about in their chairs and appear irritated, again do not be alarmed. They haven't St. Vitus' dance nor are they on the verge of nervous prostration.

These peculiar actions are only a part of Brooklyn's awful secret—fleas. The borough across the bridge is rapidly getting into the same class with San Francisco, which for years has been noted as the greatest flea-producing city in the country. Brooklyn already is a close second and is gaining on every leg. It has reached the stage in Flatbush where reminiscences are exchanged and prizes may soon be offered for the greatest number of bites per square inch.

The subway did it. Brooklyn wept, wailed and pleaded for a subway. Brooklyn got it, and now Brooklyn wishes it hadn't. With the subway came the fleas.

Every shovelful of earth held its quota, and residents along the line of the subway began to feel that they should remove to other sections. The number of the pests increased, and other sections of the borough began to suffer. Poor, downtrodden Flatbush is now the centre of attraction for the pests. No really respectable Flatbush family is without them.

As a consequence, Dr. Walter Bensel, in charge of the Health Department in Brooklyn, has been besieged with requests for remedies, but he is helpless. "Wait for cold weather" is all he can say. "The cold will kill them."

JUDGE BREWER MEANT WELL

The late Justice Brewer was presiding, years ago, over a civil case in which one of the important witnesses was a horse doctor named Williams. The doctor was a small man, with a weak little voice, and the counsel on both sides, as well as the court and jury, had great difficulty in hearing his testimony.

During cross-examination the counsel for the plaintiff became exasperated and began to prod and harry the little man.

"Dr. Williams," he shouted, "if we are ever going to get anywhere with this case you must speak up so the court will hear you. Speak up loud and strong, sir!"

The small-sized veterinary tried, but it was evidently no use. Whether from embarrassment or inability the sound would not come.

"Well, your honor—" began the counsel indignantly, when Judge Brewer stopped him with a gesture. Leaning over the bench he said in his kindly tone:

"Mr. Attorney, you must be patient with the doctor. He cannot help it. Years spent in the sickroom have apparently made speaking low a second nature with him."
