BUTCHERING TIME

(Philadelphia Press.)

The estimable hog is about ripe for slaughter. Sausage -both "skin" and "ball" —with hot cakes on the side, are due, and shall be duly welcome. Also the scrapple which has added glory to the name of our City of Brotherly Love.

Throughout the Union in these days the cauldron on frosty mornings may be seen a-boiling; the farmer, his boys and the help overalled for slaughter; the housewife and children quivering for the sound of squeal and subsequent series of mortuary grunts which mean a winters supply of bacon. The first supply after the killing is always of note; the tenderest of the loin meat, the first of the sausage—these are the finest annals of the farm. Thenceforward (in a countless number of families,) there develops a decreasing interest in the hog. A persistent diet of bacon and eggs throughout the year is not likely to beget a high opinion of the porker towards the end of spring.

The food made of the hog and the chicken is that of which the people do not seem to tire. On shipboard, in camp, in the choicest cafes, bacon is always in demand for breakfast, and chicken for dinner. And the eating habits of these two esculent animals are not dainty, but quite the reserve, and still their meat is delicious.

CHILDREN IN FICTION

(Indianapolis Star.)

Among male novelists Dickens takes the lead as a delineator of children. All kinds and conditions of them flock through his books. He depicted life as he saw it and wherever he looked there were children, therefore children had a natural and inevitable place in his pages. From the Fat Boy of Pickwick Papers to Tiny Tim the procession is long and includes a notable list—David Copperfield, Oliver Twist, Little Nell, Florence Dombey and her brother, Poor Jo, the little Kenwigses, Toddles and many more. If they are not children exactly as readers of this day see them they are children as he saw them and he pictures them with a vividness that gives them a lasting place in the readers mind. They stand forth more clearly on "memory's wall" than the real personages of history. Several of Thackeray's characters are introduced in her childhood, as Henry Esmond, Pendennis and Becky Sharp, and are brought along to maturity, but this is merely by way of accounting for their later peculiarities and the child portraits leave no special impression. Poe never wrote of children, Hawthorne did, but of dream children rather than those of real life. Later male novelists for the most part ignore the young of their race. Henry James seldom realizes that children are on earth. There is "Maizie," to be sure, but Maizie is not a real child. Thomas Hardy is aware of them and introduces Jude as a boy, but dwells lightly on this early life of his hero.

SENSE OF HUMOR

(Chicago Tribune.)

A dignified, retired judge in the East was brought near to death lately through a fit of laughter caused by a comparison of a woman in a hobble skirt to a giraffe with its feet tied together. The possession of a keen sense of humor would hardly find this convulsing, but it nearly killed the judge. So, too, a man in Lawrenceburg, Ind., laughed for 12 hours over the idea of trading a mule for a shaved tail horse.

A sense of humor is often a safety valve to human beings. Life would be a dull thing without it, but its manifestations are beyond estimation. A recent writer speaks of the frequency with which it spoils the most pathetic scenes at the theater; of how that which should incite pity is mistaken by the thoughtless for a subject of mirth. The criticism is deserved, but it is to be doubted if it will correct a misplaced sense of humor which seems to be inherent in a considerable portion of the human race.

There is no accounting for taste, even in matters of this sort, and there is no way to prevent grave and reverend jurists or mule traders from becoming victims of an undeveloped or a too greatly developed sense of humor.

SNAPSHOT OF A GHOST

Prof. Wm. James' Spirit Claimed to Have Been Photographed.

New York, Nov. 12.—Prof. William James, who, at the time of his death, three months ago, was instructor in psychology in Harvard University, and who said just before he died that he would after death try to get into communication with the material world, has appeared in the spirit and has been photographed by Soren Lindgren, a resident of the Bronx, according to a statement by the latter.

Mr. Lindgren, who is a professional clergyman, and although not a member photographer, is the son of a Swedish of any society for physical research, has, since a boy, he says, been in communication with spirits and declares he owes his life to a warning communicated to him some years ago by what he calls "the lady in white," who is his personal guardian.

Mr. Lindgren was at work in the dark room of his studio developing pictures three weeks ago, when he felt, he says, a strange sense of another presence in the room, and on looking around could see a wraith slowly taking form, but the lines never became distinct. But almost every day thereafter, he said, the wraith was present. His efforts to engage it in conversation were futile until Thursday, November 5, when he said he asked:

"Are you Professor James?"

The answer was "Yes," and Mr. Lindgren asked the spirit of the professor if he would pose for a picture.

"Not here," was the reply, according to Mr. Lindgren. "I will see you at your house tomorrow night at 9 o'clock."

Mr. Lindgren says the professor didn't keep the appointment, but Lindgren was not discouraged. He prepared for the coming of the spirit the next night. He brought to his home a dozen dry plates in their original package, and at his repuest they were opened by a friend of his wife, Miss Alva Franson, who put them in the plateholders in the darkened room. Mr. Lindgren had asked her to do that because she had hinted at photographic trickery.

The camera containing the plate was on the edge of the dining-room table, at which Mr. and Mrs. Lindgren and Miss Franson were seated, when Mr. Lindgren, looking toward the living room, saw the wraith forming. He went into the room and extinguished the gas light, then went to the dining room and exposed the camera plate.

Mr. Lindgren says that it was his purpose after getting the photograph which he deemed the most important, to engage the spirit in conversation, but before he could do so it had vanished. When asked what the spirit looked like Mr. Lindgren gave a fairly accurate discription of Professor James as he appeared in life.

THE STUDY OF BROOKS

Efforts to Determine the Effects of Forests Upon Streams

(From the Chicago Tribune)

The subject of the influence of forests upon stream flow is one which is just now being given a great deal of consideration all the world over and there seems to be a variety of opinion.

Although streams have been gauged and rainfall measured for generations, the observations thus far accumulated were mostly taken for the purposes of climatology alone, or of hydrology alone, and it is found exceedingly difficult to apply them to a solution of the problem in question, and so there is a paucity of reliable data on which to found conclusions. In this breach the government has stepped and a complete study of the effects of forest cover upon stream flow, erosion, disposition of silt, etc., as well as their possible meterological relations will be carried out on two watersheds of similar topography near Wagon Wheel Gap, Colorado, in the Rio Grande national forest.

The dams and instruments for the measurement of stream flow, together with a complete equipment of meterological apparatus, will be installed at about 9,500 feet elevation above sealevel. The streams drain an area that extends upward to about 10,500 feet elevation. It is intended to measure the flow of the two streams for a period of eight or ten years—i. e., long enough to show that with similar forestation the behavior of the two streams is the same.

One of the watersheds will then be cleared and the measurements will be continued for a further period of eight or ten years, so that the effects of denudation may be perfectly determined by comparing the results of observations in the two tracts.

THE MEANING OF HAPPINESS

(Charleston News and Courier)

Happiness is the supreme object of man largely, we may suppose, because it is an ideal state, which few beings have attained except for short periods in their existence. Perhaps this is because happiness is a relative thing, depending on environment, previous conditions, and the status of the individual's mind. Just as to the man who has been out in the winters cold, a room in which the temperature is 50 degrees will seem warm, so one who has been buffeted about in the battle with the world, beaten down at every turn, will find much happiness in a station which to another would be supreme unhappiness.

Happiness depends on one's training, and still more on the natural tendencies of a person. One man finds delight in books, in earnest study all his life; another finds joy in the open air communing with nature. One holding money before him as the great goal obtains comparative happiness in obtaining it. Another finds in the love of wife and children even greater happiness, albeit he have but the simple means of living. Ingersoll would rather have been the poor peasant toiling in his rocky fields for bread than Napoleon with all his glory. Caesar would rather have been first in a little Iberian village than second at Rome. Woolsey, after a long life spent in the service of his king, died regretting that he had not served God with half the zeal he had his earthly master.

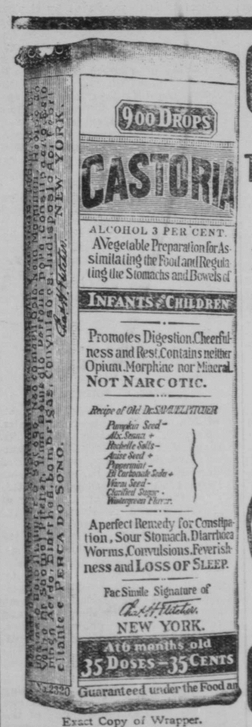

A FLYING FROG

(From St. Nicholas)

In Java and some other places is a remarkable flying tree frog, with a green back, a white belly and a bright orange colored membrane between its toes, which are tipped by circular discs.

Like the chameleon, it can change its color to suit its surroundings. It feeds at night on insects, and when disturbed leaps out of the tree and sails away to safety. Some observers call it a frog, while others say it is a tree toad.

The membrane between the toes probably acts as a parachute, and not as a flying apparatus. The toe discs, like similar enlargements on our common tree toad, must act like suckers to hold the animal firmly in place against the trunk or the limb.

The Famous Angle Lamp

Never smokes or smells whether burned at full height or turned low like gas. It is not merely an ordinary lamp improved. It is an entirely new method of oil lighting. For simplicity and convenience of operation it is the closest rival of gas or electricity. For splendid reading light and artistic general illumination it is the superior of either. The angle at which the flame burns throws the best light from its most brilliant surface directly downward. The effect of the light is doubled, producing a reading light with which no other system can even compare. Yet the Angle Lamp is the most economical of all lighting methods. Costs less to burn than even the ordinary lamp—fully ½ less. Set call and see it or write us for full description booklet.
