A PRACTICAL ONE STORY BUNGALOW

Design 836, by Glenn L. Saxton, Architect, Minneapolis, Minn.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW—FROM A PHOTOGRAPH.

FLOOR PLAN.

One feature in favor of the real bungalow is that all the rooms are on one floor, which removes the necessity of continually climbing stairs. This bungalow has a very desirable arrangement, with a large living room and reception room, which become one great room when the vestibule and coat closet are omitted. There are two splendid chambers with ample closet space and a liberal bath. There is a small basement under the rear portion of the house, reached by a trapdoor in the kitchen. The house is twenty-six feet wide and forty-three and a half feet deep over all. Cost to build, exclusive of heating and plumbing, $1,700.

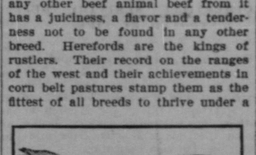

By special arrangement with me the editor of this paper will furnish a complete set of plans and specifications of design No. 836 for $13.

GLENN L. SAXTON.

GOOD QUALITIES OF THE HEREFORD.

Herefords stand alone in their ability to convert grass into high class beef. They mature at an earlier age than other cattle. Being the most docile of the bovine species, they take on flesh more readily and give better results in feed lots or pastures than the representatives of any other breed, writes Overton Harris in the Breeder's Gazette. Being uniform in color, they make market stock that catches the eye of the yard buyer. Depositing their flesh on those parts of the skeleton from which the highest priced meats are cut, the back and loin, they are specially popular with butchers and killers.

Since fat and lean are blended in a Hereford carcass more evenly than in any other beef animal beef from it has a juiciness, a flavor and a tenderness not to be found in any other breed. Herefords are the kings of rustlers. Their record on the ranges of the west and their achievements in corn belt pastures stamp them as the fittest of all breeds to thrive under a wide variety of conditions. Since they lead all breeds in rustling qualities it is natural that they should also stand first as regards health, constitution, vigor and prepotency. Essentially an outdoor breed, Herefords are the healthiest cattle in the country. This means resistance to the common diseases which make success with other breeds difficult and in many cases impossible.

The Hereford breed of beef cattle is a prime favorite in the far west and southwest on account of its superior range qualities. Cattle raisers of Oklahoma, Texas, Kansas, Colorado and other range states pin their faith to the white faced cattle. The illustration shows Scottish Lassie, who was senior yearling and grand champion Hereford female at the international live stock show, Chicago.

Most strains of breeding produce as good milkers as are found in any of the beef breeds. There are no milkless Herefords. Some are shallow milkers because they have been highly specialized to excel as beef types, and whatever the loss of milk giving in such specimens it is more than offset by the increased superiority of the animals as beef models. "White face" cows are the best of mothers. An overwhelming majority of them give plenty of milk properly to raise their calves. What few nurse cows I have for my show cattle are Herefords. If a man wants more milk in a herd of Herefords he can soon get it through breeding; if he wants the highest type of beef animal he can select it from established herds.

Good Breeding at Low Cost.

The cheapest way for a poor man to obtain the use of a pure bred sire is to induce a dozen of his neighbors to cooperate with him in the purchase of a sire of merit as may be desirable. The Minnesota station believes this a feasible plan for poor or well to do farmers. The poor man can hardly afford to own such a sire for his exclusive use. The more fortunate neighbor doesn't want to waste money in exclusive ownership, so the practical way is to own a bull in neighborhood partnership and all use him until his usefulness is exhausted by reason of relationship to the cows of the community. Then he may be sold to some other equally wise neighborhood.

Mares In Foal.

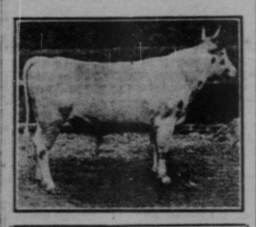

Mares do not usually give trouble by abortion if given good food and reasonable care. Of course when pregnant a mare should not be overdriven nor be compelled to smell blood or offal and should not back or hold back heavy loads. Her stall should not have much incline. Nourishing food, pure water and fresh air are essentials. If one suspect ergot or smut in hay or feed it should be discarded.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE AYRSHIRE.

The Ayrshire is a Scotch breed of dairy cattle, coming to us from the county of Ayr, Scotland, and has been a distinct breed for over 150 years, says Kimball's Dairy Farmer. While at the present time they may not be as popular as some breeds, they are fast coming to the front, both in the dairy and show ring.

As to their conformation they can hardly be improved upon, their evenness of form being particularly noticeable.

The chief characteristics of the Ayrshire in appearance is fine face, with clean cut features, brightness of eye, upturned horn, thin neck, fine shoulder, good heart and lung capacity, straight back, strong loin, large abdomen showing food capacity (or a silo of their own), long, broad hips, large finely balanced udder, large well placed teats, well developed mammary gland and soft, loose skin of medium thickness, covered with a thick coating of fine hair, equal red and white, brown and white or verging to nearly all white.

In temperament it is docile, but alert. The Ayrshire is a very hardy and vigorous animal. This natural vigor combined with their activity and other superior qualities particularly fits them for all climates and conditions.

Perhaps the Ayrshire has been called the "farmer's cow" owing to the fact that her milk is well suited for dairy, cheese or city market.

As the Ayrshire breed becomes better known so it will become more appreciated.

Ridding Stock of Lice.

For horses and cattle a good remedy for lice, according to the Orange Judd Farmer, is made as follows: Boil for an hour eight tablespoonfuls arsenic, eight tablespoonfuls soda ash and sixteen tablespoonfuls soft soap in two gallons water. After being prepared by boiling add enough water to make two gallons. When cool wet the animal all over with a little of it, using a brush or currycomb to get it into the skin. Another good remedy is made of boiling stavesacre seeds, one part to twenty parts water, for an hour and letting it simmer for another hour, then adding water to make it up to the original bulk. This applied to the affected parts brings quick relief.

It is advisable to repeat the application in a week or ten days, so as to catch any new lice from any eggs that were not caught by the first application. A very common treatment is secured by mixing a pint of linseed oil, eight tablespoonfuls oil of tar and eight tablespoonfuls sulphur. This is then rubbed on the affected parts once a day for two days and allowed to remain for a few days, after which it is washed off with soap and water. In serious cases the application should be repeated within a week or so. Of course any of the disinfecting fluids on the market, used either as a spray or a wash, will do the work satisfactorily.

The Freshening Cow.

It is not an uncommon occurrence to neglect the cow which is due to freshen, whereas if proper attention was given her up to this time she should produce exceptional results, says Dr. D. Roberts, Wisconsin state veterinarian. Give her sufficient and proper feed, as this will encourage the development of a large udder. A swollen udder after freshening would indicate that she is a good cow, because it is the large flow of milk which causes the distention of the udder. It is at this period that the average stock owner is apt to err in allowing the calf to nurse its mother owing to the fact that the calf has a tendency while nursing to butt the udder, thus causing increased irritation. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of caring for the udder, it being advisable to apply soothing applications in case the same is unnaturally swollen or caked. A mild tonic is often advisable where there is an unnatural swelling of the udder, as it has a better effect than outward applications.

Silage as a Stock Food.

Silage alone is not a complete food, but it is identical with the green corn stalk and during the season of dry feed supplies the cow with that succulence which nearly all other rations, excepting a ration involving alfalfa hay, do not have. Silage and alfalfa hay will make a balanced ration and cheap. Study the silo question. It is worth while, says the Kansas Farmer. It is worth while whether you are milking a single cow or not. Horses, hogs, pigs and calves eat silage and thrive on it as well as does the dairy cow.

BUYING A HORSE.

First take a general look at a horse before buying; then his hocks should be examined, at the same time watching the flanks. A study of the head is essential. In the hock and in the wind will be found the most common defects. Those puffy enlargements about the hocks indicate spavin. If the animal has the heaves this can be detected in the flanks.

An unusual expansion and contraction of the nostrils will prove that there is something wrong with his wind. Wrinkles back and above the nostrils will show very clearly the degree to which he is affected. One can tell a horse's wind by placing the ear to the windpipe.

The horse's forehead should be wide and the ears well apart. The animal should have a bright eye. If the ears have short points bent forward and carried back and close together the indications are that he is balky and a kicker.

MILK FEVER TREATMENT.

Proper Method of Injecting Air Into the Cow's Udder.

The air treatment for milk fever is a simple one. The apparatus manufactured by several companies makes it easy to inflate the udder with air and is nothing more or less than a bicycle pump modified, of course, to do this work to better advantage, says Hoard's Dairyman. A bicycle pump may be used in the absence of the pump manufactured especially for this purpose.

The end of the instrument is attached to a small tube which is inserted in the end of the teat. Care should be taken to sterilize the tube in boiling water or corrosive sublimate; also to wash the end of the teat, as there is great danger of doing more harm than good to the udder. After the tube is inserted in the teat the operator forces the air into the udder with the pump. Each quarter is inflated, and care should be taken not to distend the udder too much. In the treatment of milk fever and garget it is customary to place rubber bands around each teat to prevent the air from escaping too rapidly. For milk fever it sometimes requires a second injection, but if the bands are used one treatment is usually enough.

For garget the udder is not filled quite so full as for milk fever, and after the udder is inflated it is thoroughly massaged, especially the quarter affected with garget.

Management of Boars.

The careless methods employed by some breeders in their management of boars accounts for a goodly part of the "bad luck" in swine raising, says a Missouri hog raiser. Allowing the boar to run with the herd is a common practice that should be discontinued. Following his animal instincts, the boar soon saps away his vitality. The animal also worries other members of the herd, especially the younger sows, and he is even liable to cause serious injury in such cases as well as get some with pig at too early an age for them to make suitable brood sows. Besides, his changeable moods make him a dangerous animal to have running at large. Often one of them suddenly becomes vicious and turns on the first person he encounters. The tusks should be removed from the boar's mouth early in his career in order to guard against all possible accidents.

The only safe plan of managing the boar is to have a lot and quarters expressly for confining him in and furnishing him plenty of exercise and sunlight. Thus managed he will remain quiet and tractable.

Diameter of the Silo.

The size of the silo must, of course, depend on the amount of stock to be fed, as a certain amount must be fed each day to keep the top layer from spoiling. Narrow and deep is the right construction, and the deeper the better, as each added foot gives added weight to the silage and helps to make it more solid and exclude the air. To insure long service wooden silos should be lathed and plastered or bricked on the inside. This keeps the silage from coming in contact with the wood and does not permit of that wetting and drying which soon decay the wood. If a silo is made too large in diameter, and this is a very frequent error, one of two things will happen—either the silage will be moldy all the time, owing to the inability to feed it down rapidly enough, or else the cows will be fed more than they should have in an attempt to keep ahead of the molding.

Horse's Teeth Need Attention.

More attention should be given to the care of horses' teeth. Often an animal is punished for some infirmity of temper or dosed for some ailment when the whole trouble lies in an ulcerated tooth or in teeth that no longer articulate—that is, no longer come together so perfectly that they will properly grind the animal's food. Often this latter defect produces indigestion and other internal disorders. Have a competent veterinarian go over a horse's teeth whenever you suspect that they are causing the animal trouble.

Care of Young Stock.

The proper place for youngsters is outdoors whenever they want to go there. They will do best with plenty of range, plenty of shelter when they want it and plenty of feed to make them grow.

Sheep Shearings.

The Merino ewe and the mutton ram make about as profitable a sheep combination as it is possible to get.

Without proper feed and care no one can expect success with sheep.

In selecting a ram to head the flock a cull is dear at any price.

Remember, if your sheep are good there will always be a good, active market for them.

There is no longer any question about the wisdom of raising roots for sheep feeding. They keep the sheep in the best possible condition.
