SIDE TWO

that beautiful sentiment that "the memory of the just is blessed" - for we have received and are receiving the fruits of their labours, their sacrifices and their dedication of heart to their required work - May we be as faithful, to every requirement of our day, as becomes the followers of our blessed Lord and Master, who sent his disciples into "the fields already white into the harvest" to reap that "on which they had bestowed no labor" with these instructive words, "Other men have laboured and ye have entered into their labours" - and I thank my Heavenly Father that the world is better to-day for the labours of those who have gone before us; so that "he that soweth and he that reapeth may rejoice together" - and let us rejoice and with reverent hearts give thanks, that we are the recipients of such unmeritied blessings.

Heartily & truly
