expressions. Mr Pearsall Smith says he is descended from one of the Lloyds who accompanied Wm Penn. I think he has succeeded in arousing many to shine after holiness; but he does not seem to me to make allowance for the depth of man's corruption, nor to consider that while we live, we carry with us a body of death which never can be subject to the law of God, and will never cease to molest us. His wife has been speaking to companies of ladies in the drawing rooms of all classes, and has drawn together considerable audiences.

Speaking from country reminds me that I have had sent to me a pamphlet by one of your Presbyterian clergymen, the Rev. Chas Wolfe
