0450

1875 January-March Casper Morris incoming letters 1994

Have the shame of prudent delay now
how will it endure the trials which are inevitable in the future?
It is better for her that she should be subjected to disappointment now than that she should find herself overwhelmed by a burden of the weight of which she can form no estimate not only because she has had no experience, but because not even you yourself have any means of
judging of it.
Let it be for you
to bear manfully
yourself the ills you fail to sensibly and which I realize for you fully. But do not Better to bear the ills you know than madly rush on those you know not of. i the wise for experience Yours truly
Casper Morris