NATURE'S WARNING

Westminster People Must Recognize and Heed it.

Kidney ills come mysteriously.
But nature generally warns you.
Notice the kidney secretions.
See if the color is unhealthy—
If there are settlings and sediment,
Passage frequent, scanty, painful
It's time to fear serious kidney trouble.
It's time to use Doan's Kidney Pills.

Doan's have done great work in Westminster.

J. F. Stem, Pennsylvania Ave., Westminster, Md., says: "For some time my kidneys were disordered. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage, causing annoyance, and I also suffered from backache. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Moore's Drug Store, soon made me well. I gave a statement in 1907, publicly recommending this remedy and I now confirm all I then said."

The above statement must carry conviction to the mind of every reader. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—ask distinctly for Doan's Kidney Pills, the same that Mr. Stem had— the remedy backed by home testimony. 50c all stores. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

His Ward

By EMILY G. BOND

John Wilkins, a bachelor of forty, living in his own house, which was taken care of by an old woman who had been in the family for many years, sat down to breakfast alone. Several letters that had just been brought by the postman lay on the table, one of which was from a firm of lawyers, informing him that by the will of the late Edward Burroughs he (Wilkins) was appointed guardian to the deceased's daughter, Alice.

"Ned Burroughs dead!" exclaimed Wilkins, much affected by the news, and for a time he gave himself up to reflections upon the loss of a chum of his younger days. Burroughs had gone to live in a different place. They had corresponded for awhile, but that inevitable separator, continued absence, had come between them, and for ten or fifteen years they had not met.

Presently the purport of the letter, his guardianship, occurred to him. He could not think of Burroughs as any older than when he last saw him and assumed that his ward was a little girl.

What this guardianship meant, whether he was expected to take care of his ward's property or his ward herself he had no idea, but his mind was soon set at rest upon opening another letter, from his ward herself, which informed him that she was without a relative in the world that she had ever seen and did not know what to do.

It seemed to Wilkins that he must see the child and learn something about her property—if she had any—and how she was to live. But just then he found it inconvenient to get away. He wrote her that the only thing for her to do was to come to him. He told her how he was situated and that Mrs. Hawkins, his housekeeper, would take excellent care of her. A reply to this letter informed him that Alice would arrive in a few days. Wilkins told Mrs. Hawkins to prepare for her reception.

"How old is she?" asked the housekeeper.

"How old is she? I don't know. She may be five or six or ten or eleven or something like that."

Mrs. Hawkins asked no more questions, but prepared a bedroom for the little girl adjoining her own in case Alice were still too young to sleep entirely alone. Perhaps she wouldn't care to sleep alone anyway.

On the morning of Alice's arrival Wilkins told his housekeeper that he would have a busy day and must rely on her to meet his ward at the station. He would send a carriage to the house at a certain hour. Mrs. Hawkins was to bring Alice home, and he would be on hand for a 6 o'clock dinner.

He was so much occupied during the day that he scarcely gave the matter a thought, but on his way home he remembered it and wondered what he would do with a child in the house. However, he could tell nothing about the matter till he had seen his ward. On entering his living room he was surprised to see a young woman dressed for dinner sitting there writing. It did not occur to him that she was Alice Wilkins. But who was she? The young lady rose—she was apparently about nineteen—and advanced to meet him. She seemed herself somewhat taken aback at his appearance.

"I'm waiting for Mr. Wilkins," she remarked.

"Beg pardon. Will you tell me—who you are?"

"I'm Mr. Wilkins' ward."

"You? Mr. Wilkins' ward! I am Mr. Wilkins."

"Dear me! I expected to meet a person the age of my father."

"Your father was just my age."

"Papa was forty. You don't look much over thirty."

During this brief dialogue a very pleasurable sensation was welling up in the bosom of Mr. Wilkins, and at the same time he was perplexed at the result of the mistake.

"Well," he said, after a welcome grasp of the hand, "you're here, and here you will have to stay till we can settle what you're to do. Fortunately, Mrs. Hawkins will make a very good chaperon and will take care of you admirably. Has she made you comfortable?"

"She has."

"I'll be ready for dinner in a few minutes."

It seemed that evening to Mr. Wilkins that his dining room looked different from ever before. The lights burned brighter, the dinner tasted better, the flowers on the table smelled sweeter. Wilkins took up the subject of his ward's future, but made no progress in settling it. As to her fortune, her father had left her nothing, and she must either marry or make her own living.

After dinner the two adjourned to the library and continued to seek for a solution of the problem. About 11 o'clock Wilkins said:

"If I were ten or fifteen years younger we might find a way out, a very desirable way—to me."

Miss Burroughs made no verbal reply to this, but cast her eyes down to the floor. Mr. Wilkins maintained a prolonged silence. Both were thinking hard.

"You might make your home here," he said at last. Still the girl made no reply. "But you would have to marry me."

Silence.

"Will you?"

"Yes."
