debtor. If I acted from a foolish impulse of dissatisfaction that every reluctance exercised his undoubted rights to his opinion on this or that matter in relation to the Institution I should be very unreasonable. But without having been present you can hardly understand how distinct and humiliating was the asseption of a fiscal policy to exclude Actuaries wherever there should be children waiting for admission. So clear was this, that the Ch^n of the Com^e of Admission and Discharge announced that the Com^e would not again offer Actuaries for Admission. I do not believe he would thus speak for his Com^e, but it shows the scope of the decision in his behalf. And I think I do not err in trying that for some
