FARM ANIMALS

AVOID THE SPRING DISEASES

Give Extra Attention to Health and Condition of All Farm Stock—Worms Cause Much Trouble.

Now is the time to give a little extra attention to the health and condition of your sheep and hogs; in fact, all farm stock. Never was a "stitch in time" more profitably taken than right now in doing all you can to rid our stock of worms and parasite infection. Practically all spring diseases and troubles of all farm stock are caused by worms, and with the opening of spring these pests will develop and multiply in incalculable numbers and with such ravenous and destructive appetites it is impossible for farm stock to thrive when they are present.

Their presence is indicated by drowsy, dull eyes, rough coats, gauntness, general rundown condition, indigestion, finally resulting in the development of a disease. Sometimes the animals may have a good appetite, but the food they eat does them little, if any, good. The trouble is the worms in the stomach are getting all the nutrition and the animal is practically starving. Get rid of the worms early and when spring opens up your stock will have every chance to thrive and keep healthy.

Give them a good tonic—something that will kill and expel the worms and at the same time tone and condition the stomach. Do it now, and you will be a good many dollars better off a few months hence.

There are some excellent preparations on the market for worms which you can test without risk before you pay. Look them up and get rid of these profit-eating pests before they get a firm spring footing among your stock.

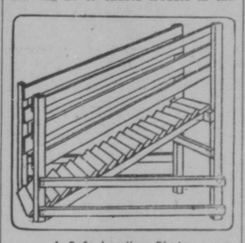

MAKES LOADING CHUTE SAFE

Every Farmer Knows Importance of Arranging Floor So That Animal Escapes Injury by Slipping.

(By JOHN Y. BEATTY, in the Farm and Fireside.)

Every live stock farmer knows the need for a good loading chute, but anyone who has had the misfortune to have an animal slip on a chute realizes the great importance of having the floor so arranged that there is no chance for the animal to slip even when the boards are wet.

Cleats sometimes break off, but the chute shown in the accompanying drawing never causes trouble in this way. Instead of laying the floor in the usual way, the boards are each laid up over the edge of the one just in front. This makes the edge of each board a cleat, and these cleats do not break off. It takes just a little more lumber to make such a chute, but the safety of it much more than repays for the extra cost. When you come right down to it the extra cost amounts to but little anyway.

ATTENTION TO COLT'S FEET

Practice and Observation Will Soon Enable Man to Determine Amount of Trimming Needed.

Regular attention to the feet of colts is absolutely necessary in this country. The hoofs often tend to grow in abnormal ways, too long on one side, tending to twist the fetlock joint, or too long at the toe, which tends to strain the ligaments, and which also tends to faulty action.

In trimming the hoof all that needs to be done can be done with a rasp. The hoof wall should be rasped off on the bottom surface until the relation of the heel, side and toe is approximately one, two and three in length, and the work should be done in such a manner as to cause the foot to rest squarely on the ground. Practice and observation will soon enable a man who has fair judgment to determine just what trimming each colt needs and how often attention will be required. As a general rule the feet should be examined every six or eight weeks.

Handy Hoof Hook.

A hoof hook should be included in the equipment of a well regulated stable. The feet of the horse should be cleaned every morning before he leaves the stable. The hoof hook will remove all litter, pebbles or anything that may have become lodged in the foot. This precaution may prevent injury to the sole or sensitive structures of the foot. If the feet become very dry, pack them daily for a week with some form of clay. Then apply lard to the wall, to which may be added pine tar and rosin.

Some solicitors for charity are so tactless just now as to ask money from people who have to pay an income tax.

Senator Kern is agitating against the newspapers that print reports of executive sessions. If the Senate will open the doors, the reporter won't bother to print much of anything.

The Lord should be thanked for the good prospects for winter wheat following the heavy snowfall, but both political parties will probably claim credit.

GROOM OF WEEK IS LOCKED UP

A bridegroom of a week, Charles E. Erb, 23 years old, 810 North Calvert street, was arrested yesterday by Detective Busick and locked up at the Central Police Station pending the arrival here of the Sheriff of Westminster, where he is wanted on serious charges. The warrant was sworn out by Miss Florence Hubbs, 15 years old, of Westminster, where Erb lived until a week ago. He will be taken to Westminster this morning for trial.

The above is a clipping from the Baltimore Sun this morning. We think probably this is an error as we fail to learn of the location of the above parties in this city.

PLEASANT VALLEY

One of the worst snow storms which we have experienced for years set in on Sunday and continued all day Monday with intense cold weather and snow drifting into every crack and crevice It was too much for our hucksters who gather produce on Monday. They concluded to wait for better weather. They succeeded on Tuesday in gathering the remainder of their produce and if nothing prevents will be in Baltimore on regular time.

Mr. Wm. Starner, our mail carrier, was somewhat late on Monday but withstood the storm which we hardly think was fit for a man to be out in, but William got through.

Our public school was closed on Monday owing to the severe storm and drifted roads as it was almost impossible for teachers as well as scholars to get here.

The teachers and pupils of Pleasant Valley school were agreeably surprised last Friday afternoon when Mr. C. C. Livingston and Miss Mabel Albert, accompanied by their pupils came here on a visit. They spent the afternoon in singing, coasting and spelling. They also visited Good Hope school on their way here. Mr. Bankert was dragged in the snow a short distance when he got the mules stopped. No damage was done.

MELROSE

One of the C. & P. wires on line 26 was broken by the storm, depriving our Ebbvale friends from service, but through the ingenuity of one of our Melrose men, the break was repaired and the C. & P. office did not need to send a lineman.

One man told your correspondent that this last storm was similar to some of the Western blizzards he had seen.

The storm and snow of Sunday night and Monday morning not only blocked the roads but destroyed a part of the electric plant of our town. Hucksters and mail carriers could not get through. Only those who were compelled to go ventured out Monday.

Many people are inquiring why the newspapers give space to Congress now that the ball players are actually trying out in Southern practice.

75,000 disappointed job seekers have been hanging around the Ford factory in Detroit, but it is hoped that no one asked men of their talents to shovel snow.

It is expected that next year any one will be able to make out an income tax blank without running down to Washington to find out how it should be done legally.

It is believed that the Small Boy would be willing to observe clean-up week next May, if he can have immunity from Saturday night baths from now until that time.

Now that President Wilson has shaken hands with 1700 Knights of Pythias, the Washington people can no longer say that he isn't performing his duties.

Alfred Noyes, the English poet, is to lecture at Princeton university. It is hoped that he does not encourage the college boys in the idle and disorderly habit of writing poetry.

Four inches of snow in the Brooklyn ball team's training camp, yet for some reason the players don't seem to realize that shoveling snow is excellent exercise.

Any one who could run across the line and persuade Gen. Villa to return and become a guest at one of Uncle Sam's excellent boarding houses for an indefinite period, would find that trifling irregularities would be overlooked.

Ice-choked machinery, which failed to control the flow of Patapsco River water through a mill race, was responsible Tueday morning for an accident which involved the collapse of the two-story stone building used as a drying room of the Oella Woolen Mills, owned by William J. Dickey and Son and erected about two years ago, a mile north of Ellicott City. Three hundred men, women and children narrowly escaped from the rushing flood, which cause damage estimated at $5,000. The upper gate of the dam was opened but the lower gate could not be opened. The water backed up and flooded the building before the upper gate could be closed.

DOCTORS AND ADVERTISING

A committee of the American Medical Association has just submitted to the national body, certain questions as to whether physicians may properly advertise their business, if so, to what extent.

The strict rules of professional etiquet have heretofore cut out advertising by physicians, other than mere professional cards. It would seem that the present tradition prevents a physician from giving the public facts that it would like to know.

When a stranger come into a town, he would like to find out how long physicians have been practising, in what diseases they make specialities or have had special experience, what medical education and hospital or other professional training they have had. It would well seem that some enlargement of the typical physician's advertising might be possible, without descending to the evils of so-called medical advertising. A little well written publicity might tend to check the tendency to waste money on untrained men and useless or harmful drugs.
