INTERVENTION NO REMEDY

Intervention is no remedy for the insurrectionary condition in Mexico. In fact there is no remedy for it, except that of a strong government, administered by a dictator, with personal power to enforce his authority. The Mexicans are by nature a turbulent people with no sense of obligation to lawful authority and their so-called republic has never been anything less than a travesty upon popular government. The history of the country, as an independent nation, has been a history of insurrections—revolutions they call them. The student of the domestic affairs of the country will be amazed to find himself confronted with the story of not less than three hundred uprisings or insurrections in not much more than the hundred of years since the yoke of the Spanish government was broken from the necks of its Mexican subjects. In all that period but one ruler has been able to maintain a really stable government at all—Porfirio Diaz, and that was done by a stern and relentless ruler. Plots against his rule were promptly suppressed and they were seldom attempted. On one occasion seven young men engaged in stirring up an insurrection were taken out of the City of Mexico and shot to death at sunrise, without judge or jury. It is not surprising that his rule, without an uprising, continued for more than thirty years and gave peace, safety and prosperity to the country. Another great Mexican was Benito Pablo Juarez, who was president between 1861 and 1871, and under whose leadership the attempt to establish a Mexican Empire under Maxamilian was overthrown and the unfortunate tool of Louis Napoleon executed. But Juarez was not able to establish a stable government in the Northern States of the country, having been opposed and frustrated in his attempts by Diaz. He failed of re-election to the presidency in 1871 and died in 1872. Diaz was not elected till 1877 and served only till 1880, not having been eligible to re-election until the Constitution of the country was amended. Then he was again chosen, in 1884, and remained in power for nearly thirty years continuously, until he was overthrown and banished by the unfortunate Madero. Since then revolution and counter-revolution have been in progress and the end is not yet in sight. It is probably safe to say that the country is without a man of the calibre necessary to measure up to a successful dictatorship. Both Huerta and Villa are men without character and the ability to govern. The latter, like the former, is no better than an assassin. It is being revealed that his story of the execution of the Scotchman Benton was false and that the man, unarmed, was killed with a knife thrust.

Now this recital of past and present conditions in Mexico is only preliminary to the expression of the opinion that intervention in the internal affairs of the country by the United States is not to be thought of, unless this country is prepared to invade the country with a large army and maintain it for an indefinite period. Intervention may be popular, provided the United States means to occupy the country and build up a government based upon law and order, after generations and the actual creation of a new people. Such work as that, in contrast with what this country is doing in its effort to fit the Filipinos for self-government, would be equal to leveling the Rocky Mountains to the face of a prairie. Are the American people ready to undertake the experiment?

Intervention would no doubt be popular for the time being, but government and people would tire of it. There is but one wise thing to do and that is to let the Mexican people fight it out, or try to fight it out, among themselves. People of other countries who are willing to risk business and enterprises in a country thus distracted should be forwarned against consequences and take their chances. Of course citizens of this and other countries who have, in the past, engaged in legitimate business should receive from any Mexican government that may ever get even temporary recognition just compensation for their losses, but that should be the end of it. Future risks should be taken individually and not by the governments of those who undertake them.

ENGLAND FACES A CRISIS

The revolt of the Province of Ulster against Home Rule for Ireland has brought the English government to a serious crisis in its effort to create an Irish Parliament and place in the hands of the Irish people a measure of autonomy independent of English control. For many years the ablest English statesmen have been wrestling with the problem and just as its solution appears at hand, an obstacle of the most serious character bars the way to its peaceful accomplishment. The Province of Ulster is in practical revolt against the new order proposed.

Ulster lies at the extreme north end of the Emerald isle, and contains about one-fourth of its area and considerably more than a third of its population, a population essentially different in most of its characteristics and in its religon from a majority of the Irish people. The other three provinces—Connaught, Leinster and Munster—contain a population overwhelmingly devoted to the Catholic religion, while the Ulsterites are as wedded to Protestantism and are determined to resist amalgamation with an Irish Home government that will make them absolutely subordinate to the control of the Catholic majority. They mean to carry their opposition to forcible resistance to the authority of the English government, or its Premier, Mr. Aisquith, and have evidently been preparing for a death struggle. They are a brave and splendid people and have not taken this step without counting the cost and a purpose to sacrifice life and everything it involves to maintain the stand they have taken.

There should be wisdom enough in the English government to reach some sort of compromise. Ulster desires to retain her relation with England unchanged as an integral part of the constitutional government of the home country. She should not be averse to the extension of greater home rule, under English sovereignity, to the remaining provinces. Are English statesmen unequal to meet the crisis in a spirit of compromise? They must realize that the great body of the English people is on the side of Ulster. Already the military, the soldiery, of the realm is exhibiting its sympathies in no uncertain manner, and it is said that King George is even alarmed for the safety of his crown if the government shall resort to coercion against the loyal Ulsterites. Such a contingency is highly improbable and may be nothing more than the vaporing of newspaper correspondents, but that the situation is fraught with serious difficulties and dangers to the English realm can not be denied.

It is unfortunate that Ireland is divided between two elements so diverse, especially in their religious convictions, but the difference is radical and cannot be overcome. It is essentially impossible to unite them in a harmogeneous government. Just what a day may bring forth in the serious controversy cannot, at this writing, be anticipated. It may be the beginning of an irrepressible conflict, but it presents a situation that must be of interest to every American who contemplates it, for more reasons than one.

(Since the above was written the English Government has shown a marked disposition to claim to have been misunderstood in its purposes, but read between the lines it can be plainly seen that it would not have been wise to force the issue. Scores of officers of the army placed their resignations in the hands of the authorities rather than employ force to coerce the Ulsterites to accept the Home Rule contemplated for Ireland, and the scheme seems to be at a standstill and Irish Home Rule as far away as ever, unless wise statesmanship shall solve the problem. Under the circumstances it certainly should not be an impossibility. Unfortunately the House of Commons is disposed to insist upon carrying out its Home Rule program, and King George is coming in for severe censure because of his tendency to call a halt. The trouble is probably not yet over.)

THAT ATTEMPTED ROAD FUND STEAL

The Sentinel was not mistaken, in its brief reference to the roads steal, attempted in the House of Delegates, by Baltimore City and a number of the counties, last week, in supposing the Senate would probably prevent, or at least endeavor, to prevent the consummation of the nefarious scheme. The Upper House, however, went far beyond what was anticipated in its denunciation on the combination which endeavored to put across the most flagrant piece of dishonest log-rolling ever attempted by a Maryland Legislature. Senator after Senator characterized the proceeding as a downright steal and scored its projectors unmercifully. Public sentiment, all over the State, was aroused against it and its sponsors were driven to drop it without attempting a word in its defence. It had no defence. It is not surprising that behind, and before it too, for that matter, were the pliant tools of the Baltimore bosses—Preston, Mahon and Keily—but it is surprising that county members could have been found to yield to the bequest of the Triumvirate and unite with its minions in the effort to defraud other counties, which refused to get into the combination, of their just proportion of the roads fund created by the bill. Altogether the counties which were to share in the steal were to have received $533,000, which was to have been taken from the amount to which the other counties were equitably entitled. It is said that this was to have been made up to these counties by subsequent appropriations. Among the counties which provided the votes to carry the grab through were Allegany, which was to have received $100,000 extra; Frederick, $75,000 extra; Garrett, $50,000 extra, and so on. Baltimore City would have gotten its lion's share of $800,000, for expenditure by the bosses.

Glaring as was this raid upon the Treasury of the State its worst influence is to be felt in the loss of confidence the people of the counties in the combination must feel in their representatives. Not much can be said in extenuation of their conduct. They were led by the nose by the legislators who represent the bosses of Baltimore, or, possibly by these bosses themselves. For these city bosses and their representatives the people who have the good name of the State and its future well being at heart can entertain only sovereign contempt.

The steal, of course, fell through, the Senate passed the Price bill without opposition; at the present time it has passed its second reading in the House and may be ready for the Governor's signature by the time the Sentinel reaches its readers this week. But the memory of the effort to perpetuate a great iniquity upon the people of the State should not soon be forgotten, nor the source from which it emanated.

Hon. Joshua W. Miles, of Somerset county, is to be Internal Revenue Collector. It has been intimated that Senator Smith may hold up his confirmation, but that is exceedingly improbable. Mr. Miles is not a millionaire, but intellectually he is a "bigger man" than the Senator, and has a following, especially in Somerset county, that would be glad to see him in the station now occupied by the latter. He has been a member of the House of Representatives and was at one time strongly urged for the higher place. For some reason he seems to have dropped out of effort to attain to that position, but may be biding his time. He is a graduate of Western Maryland College and is well known and admired by many Westminster people of a generation ago. Apart from his rock-ribbed fealty to the sort of Democratic politics for a long time prevalent in some of the lower counties of the Eastern Shore, he is a christian gentleman to the fullest extent of that term, a faithful, earnest christian man, with none of the low characteristics of the tricky politician.

The legislature is confronted by a congested condition of its pending bills and is beginning to rush things. Measures of importance are in danger of receiving much less attention than should be stowed upon them, and less important bills, that possibly should be turned down, may slip through and become laws. There is need of an extension of the constitutional provision against the late introduction of bills for consideration. Rules to prevent that condition were adopted at the beginning of the session, it is said, but have been entirely ignored.

From the Frederick News.

MAY GET FOR BRIDE A FREDERICK GIRL

From an authoritive source it has been learned that the young man of Westminster, who some time ago askid The News to help him in his search for a wife, desiring to secure one of the pretty Frederick girls, is progressing nicely with his campaign, and he is pleased with the replies that have thus far been received, so much so that he is not desirous of making a further special public appeal. A picture of the young fellow has been seen by certain parties in Frederick, and they say that he is fine looking.

Asked in regard to efforts to locate a wife, he wrote: "My campaign is progressing very good and I think I will be able to take one of your goodlooking and refined young ladies away from Frederick for a bride. You might laugh at me, but I never tackled anything yet I could not carry out and when I want to do something I do it well."

The wife hunter writes a good letter. He is the corresponden for some local papers in his neighborhood. From all appearances, he is in earnest, and from what can be learned it is possible that some interesting announcement may follow in the course of time.

Postmaster W. C. Birely, of Frederick, has received three letters which were sent to him in response to the request of the Westminster youth. Two were from Westminster and the other from Mt. Airy.

One of the letters was an evident joke. At least one of the others was probably written in dead earnest. The two letters follow:

"Mr. Bireley: I read in the paper where there was a young man who wanted a wife and had written to you to make his desires known. So will you please send me his full name and address. If so you will oblige me very much. But please do not publish my name in the newspaper."

"Mr. Birely: In reading the paper see you are asked by a Westminster youth to find a wife. Well here is your chance to play cupid. Am traveling now, being in Westminster when I read the letter. My home is in Washington, D. C. So if you are to play Dan Cupid in this case send the young man's address, and do not keep me waiting. I remain, thanking you in advance, etc."
