NO SCANDAL YET

The hurly-burly of embarking the United States troops for Cuba in 1898 is still clearly remembered. The supplies scandals of that period are still odoriferous. Many people have been expecting similar blots would deface the army record as soon as the troops should be moved outside American soil.

The placing of a sizable army in Mexico is a big proposition. But it is no bigger proposition than the building and operation of our railroads. If army inefficiency should develop later, let the American people clearly understand that these troubles are perfectly needless and remediable. The moment public service work is taken out of politics and put on a business basis, it can be conducted with the minimum of friction that is seen in private enterprises.

It is a source for patriotic congratulation, that the army and navy movements so far undertaken have been handled systematically, and that our forces are comfortably fed and equipped, and the wounded and suffering have been skillfully cared for.
