ARMY WORM THREATENS INJURY TO CROPS

Has Appeared In Many Sections Of The State During Past Two Weeks. Farmers Should Be On Lookout For These Worms And Take Prompt Measures To Prevent Them From Doing Serious Injury.

The worms will attack most any grain or forage crop, including grass on lawns, etc. They do their injury by eating the foliage of various crops. When occurring in vast numbers, they will usually eat clean, as they travel from place to place.

The insect is controlled by a stomach poison, either Arsenate of Lead or Paris green. Whenever it is possible to use a liquid spray, the paste form of Arsenate of Lead may be used, by dissolving 2 pounds in 50 gallons of water, in which has been dissolved 3 pounds of laundry soap. Paris green may be used at the rate of 10 ounces to each 50 gallons. This spray can be used on grasses or lawns which are not pastured or afterwards used for forage.

On forage crops and others where it is dangerous to use the spray, the most effective remedy is the use of poisoned bait. This is made by mixing 1½ pound of Paris green or powdered arsenate of lead, 50 pounds of bran or middlings, one gallon molasses, with sufficient water to make a crumbling mass.

This bait should be spread broadcast on the ground where the worms are at work. They will be attracted to it, feed upon it, and be killed. In some cases it is best to plow one or two furrows around an infested area, so that the worms in passing to a new field will be caught in the furrow. Various means can be embployed to kill the means can be employed to kill the worms in the furrows, such as dragging a log over them, by use of tar or by use of kerosene.

The Army Worm is easily controlled if taken in hand when they first appear. Everyone should be on the lookout for this pest, and report made of its occurrence to Thomas B. Symons, State Entomologist, College Park, Md.

STIFF COLLARS

Most men pride themselves on their independence of fashion plates. They laugh at the women for subserviency to the Paris dressmaker. Then they proceed to demonstrate their independence, by wearing through hot weather the stiff starched collars that throttle their perspiring necks.

In the circles of simpler living, a more philosophic habit prevails. The farmer or the mechanic has nothing to lose by dressing for his work. But if the lawyer or business man walked down to his office collarless, and with sleeves rolled to his elbows, his stenographer would ask Mamma if it was a proper place for her to work.

It can at least be said for the starched collar that it gives an appearance of trig neatness that has its value to the business man. But the younger fellows do not feel that anything short of a broad expanse of white linen is consistent with their style. With heads elongated by high collars, they march down street like snapping turtles in their shells, and pride keeps them cool.

OKLAHOMA'S VARIED RESOURCES

"The Earth," a monthly publication, issued in Chicago, and devoted chiefly to making known the advantages of the region known as the "Sante Fe Southwest," contains, in its July number an interesting article on Oklahoma's Varied Resources, written by Mr. George R. Bixler, of Oklahoma City, a son of Mr. Geo. A. Bixler, of this city. Russell, by which name he is familiarly known to his friends here, is making good in the far-away city of the Southwest, of which he is now a resident. He writes intelligently and tells some wonderful facts about the State, which will be read with interest by readers of the Sentinel. He says:

Much has been said, to the detriment of the State of Oklahoma, regarding the drought of 1913. While it is true that we had a very dry season, yet the reports which have gone out over the land are inextremes and not based upon fact.

This young state, just passing its quarter-century mark, last year, added to its wealth $360,000,000 from the products of its mines, oil wells, and manufacturing industries. The sum of the agricultural products was 4,190,000,000 in value. This included $50,000,000 of cotton; indiancorn, $38,000,000; wheat, $15,000,000; oats, $8,000,000; alfalfa, milomaize, and other forage crops, $10,000,000; hay, $4,000,000; livestock, dairy, poultry, fruits, garden vegetables, etc., $65,000,000. These are based upon estimates of the Department of Agronomy of the State Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Oklahoma markets some kind of an agricultural product eleven months of the twelve, and the soil, temperature and climate combine to grow profitably all of the crops of the temperate zone. Diversified farming is practiced in the state to a great extent, and with this it is impossible to have a total crop failure.

The prospects for the crop of 1914 never were better in our history, than at the present time. Reports of a most encouraging nature are coming in daily from all over the state, and it is expected that Oklahoma will break her record this year. It conservatively is estimated that the wheat now harvested will average from twenty to twenty-five bushels per acre. The cotton is a good stand, and all indications point to a great yield. The alfalfa never was in better condition, and the first cut began late in May. This crop always is from three to five cuts yearly. Indian-corn could not be in better condition than at the present time. Other crops are growing as well as could be expected, and farmers and townsmen alike are greatly encouraged by the prospects.

The mineral wealth of the state hardly has been touched, excepting the oil and gas, and only about 20 per cent of these two resurces have been developed. Some one has said: "Oklahoma has more kinds of mineral and more minerals of a kind than any other state of the Union," and the truth of the statement has been proven to both state and United States geological surveys. Oil and gas are the most valuable of these minerals, found in more than twenty counties of the state. The production of crude oil in 1913 was 62,500,000 barrels, which sold for a little more than $1 per barrel. This, with the natural gas, raised the total value to more than $75,000,000. Other mineral resources include coal, asphalt, coke, limestone, sandstone, granite, marble, zinc, lead, gypsum and glass-sand. It is estimated by the United States Geological Survey that underlying the state there are 79,000,000,000 tons of coal; 125,000,000,000 tons of gypsum; 100,000,000,000 tons of glass-sand; 50,000,000,000 tons of asphalt, and inexhaustible quantiites of granite. It is also well known that Oklahoma has enough salt to last the world hundreds of years.

Oklahoma affords many opportunities of profitable investment of capital, perhaps as great as can be found anywhere on the globe, and even though the state is only twenty-five years old, she ranks among the leading states of the Union.

REAL STRUGGLES FOR LIFE BY MOVIE ACTORS

Plunging overboard from a burning yacht which had been soaked with turpentine and charged with dynamite, struggling on life rafts in a rough sea, racing an automobile over the edge of a dock—diving with it and taking a chance on getting out—such things put realism into the movies, give thousands their anticipated thrills and sometimes constitute the actor's last appearance. So often just as real as the actual destruction of a ship is the fight for life portrayed before the lens of the camera, as may be judged from a number of interesting pictures appearing in the August Popular Mechanics Magazine.

The staging of a photoplay which included the burning and sinking of a small craft and the battle of those aboard it to save themselves, recently was undertaken by a producer. Without flames, explosions and the loss of the vessel, the picture would lack realism. Unless men fought for their lives while the fire ate its way to the dynamite which would break the boat amidship, reality again would be sacrificed. When the picture was run on the screen it lacked none of these qualities. Large quantities of turpentine saturated the ship after it had been stripped of its interior fittings. Explosives were placed aboard. It then had to be fired, while those who did the work took a chance. As flames and smoke shot mast high, the men jumped into the sea, were picked up by boats, and carried a safe distance away before the terrific blast tore the craft apart and sent it to the botom.
