C 9 7 6

1837, 1840 Caspar Morris Letter book MS 1894

Caspar Morris
Letterbook

discussion and an knowledge of it before a fall. That these feelings have been encouraged rather than repressed by you of late I believe you will not deny, and that they have produced an impression on the minds of your best friends. Much to your disadvantage I am compelled constantly to feel. But it is wide of my intention to utter any thing like reproach. I only desire to urge you to self examination in the hope that you may thereby be led to profit by the very painful circumstances in which you are now placed. Permit me to explain plainly my view of your present position: of the steps which have led to it and of your ways of thinking & feeling now. Rather more I believe than a year since in letter during now you were looking about for