Dear Stewart

Having been yourself the bearer of a note to me from Mr Brown you will not of course be surprised at his leaving to some remarks addressed to yourself on the subject respecting which Mr B requested an interview with me. Nothing I assure you but a deep interest in your welfare could induce me to address you on a subject which while it is so important to yourself you have so studiously concealed from all of your friends. Before seeing Mr B I had learned casually from your Mother your change of plan for life. Has it not been done hastily under the impulse of present disap=pointment? and are you sure that it will result in the realization of those sanguine hopes which now present themselves to your imagination? Have you sufficiently estimated the Coast
