1871-1872 Caspar Morris journal 1994

Caspar Morris
journal 1871-72

by an exhibition of views of Pompeii as it was and corresponding views of the same structures entire. Mr. Wilds has made arrangements for the exhibition of similar views in some of the buildings in the Park at home.

The restorations of animals & scenes of the world before the flood are on a portion of the grounds too remote to permit our ladies to go to them, and as we had been separated & lost in the crowd more than once during the day we thought it more prudent to avoid the fatigue & anxiety. Designing at the time to start for Dover at 7.30. am.

We found ourselves too fatigued to pack & get away & therefore took the morning for that & postponed our departure from London till afternoon. Some of the party were so much taken up with the filberts as to desire just to take one look at one part of the British Museum. But the wisdom of postponement prevailed & we left that great institution for our future gratification.

Our journey to this place has been most agreable. The hop fields of Kent were a novel & agreable sight and the entire culture of the country good. The downs varied agreably the features of the landscape. & were penetrated by long tunnels